Memoir.

On April, the 2nd, the Death Angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Johnson and claimed for its victim their little daughter, Winnie. She was born November 2 1909 and died April 2 making her 4 years and 5 months old.

She was a great singer. She told her mother what songs she wanted sung at her grave. Some of her favorite songs were: I am on the Sunny Side, You may look for me, I am going home to die no more, Jesus is calling. She leaves a father, mother, brother and a host of relatives and friends but we do not weep as those who have no hope. All was done that could be done. She had the dreaded disease cancer. The funeral was at the home Friday afternoon by Rev. J. S. Chandler and the remains were laid to rest in the family burying ground. There was an Angel band in Heaven. That was not quite complete: So God took our darling Winnie To fill the vacant seat.

Old Fate evens things up. I'll bet Edison's next door neighbor has a phonograph.

A woman's idea of a good newspaper is one in which an article describing a new way to do up the hair is given two columns a six deck head on the first page.

You don't see any of the big, broad wedding rings any more. It seems as though a woman can't see sense in advertising the fact that she is dippy about any one man.

Smart Sayings.

Give a woman a costly handkerchief and she is willing to cry if you tell her that Christopher Columbus is dead.

Life is a continuous grab for something to eat, something to drink, and something to wear.

Any way, the man who would rather be right than be President has a million chances to the other fellow's one to win out.

During the first month of married life wife will save out all the articles she sees on how to make home happy for a husband. But two years later she is saving out the advertisements of the firms that make husband-trailing a specialty.

A man can fish for eight hours without getting a bite and he can play solitaire for four hours without winning a game, but if his wife keeps him waiting four seconds he wants a divorce.

A man is nothing but an overgrown boy. Anyway, he gets whipped just as often when he insists upon having his own way.

What has become of the old-fashioned man who used to have a Sunday suit and who soused his handkerchief in cheap cologne when he dressed up?

A Great Man is one who believes that the other children in the neighborhood are as smart as his own.

A Cure for the Blues.

How many women do you suppose there are who never have fits of despondency? I have yet to find one. For a long time I allowed my feelings to rule me, and found that the more I gave up to the blues the more frequently I had them. Finally I decided that sort of things must cease. I was becoming morose and unsociable. Everything around me seemed hateful, and I am sure I must have been the same.

The next time I began to feel sarcastic and fault-finding I dropped the task in hand, donned fresh apparel and went out to call on a neighbor. It chanced that I made a mistake that time, for I found my neighbor's home better and nicer than my own. Everything was spick and span. There were no children to strow things over the floor. At home—well, there were three babies ranging in age from 5 years to 1. So by the time I reached home the blue elves had gained the day and my visit had made me feel worse than before.

Next time I went visiting again but to a home I felt sure was no better than my own and which I found lacking in many of the comforts I enjoyed besides some of the real necessities. I found children, not strong and healthy like my own but peevish and fretful from ill health and lack of care and nourishing food. Upon my return home how good to hear the joyous shouts of welcome coming from healthy lungs as the boisterous youngsters rushed out to meet me at the gate; The house seemed a new place and I felt truly thankful that I was its mistress and the mother of those blessed babes. Now when my best laid plans go all away I simply visit a woman less fortunate than I and return contented with my lot. — N. Maude Bever.

Crime Disclosed by Beer.

C. P. Nix, a young white man serving a year's sentence in Laurens county, Ga., for pistol toting, has had his sentence commuted by the governor so that he can be carried to Atlanta to stand trial for bigamy.

The history of Nix's career is unusual. He was arrested in Wrightsville, Ga., nearly a year ago on the charge of bigamy preferred against him by the brothers of a Dublin woman, whom he had married a few months before, while having a wife and two children living in Cornelia.

Some time before his arrest, a fortune teller stopped in Cornelia for a few days and wife No. 1 had her palm read. She was told that her husband was in Dublin living with another wife, and gave the name of one of the woman's brothers to whom the first wife should write. She did as the fortune teller instructed and found for herself that her husband had married a second time, the result finally turning out to be a bigamy trial for Nix.
