THE FINANCIAL CRISIS.

EX-SENATOR EDMUNDS TALKS OF THE BUSINESS DEPRESSION.

Four of Democratic Experiments at the Bottom of the Financial Paralysis—The Hawaiian Question and the Russian Treaty.

The responsibility of the democratic party for the present times and business depression which pervades all branches of trade and affects all classes of people was clearly and distinctly stated by ex-Senator George F. Edmunds of Vermont in an interview with a representative of the Tribune in New York Tuesday, he said that it was impossible to place the blame on the democratic party, or to say that the democratic party would, or because they feared that it might, carry out the harmful policies for which it declared a year ago that they were not willing to embark in new ventures or even to maintain those which they had begun. It was because there was a lack of confidence in the democratic administration, he said, that money was tight and business poor. This state of affairs was predicted by the Tribune and other republican newspapers during the last campaign as the logical result of a democratic victory. The prediction has come true; hard times have come and many people are suffering. Edmunds said that he had reason to regret the result.

"The democratic party," said Mr. Edmunds in response to a question as to the cause of the present financial depression, "in its platform during the last campaign declared for a tariff for revenue only. That was understood by nine-tenths of the people and the government should have raised its revenue by assessing a tax without regard to the effect. It would have upon the industry the products of which were taxed. Such taxation would result in changed conditions, great hardships to certain industries, uncertainty in all, with the natural result of a cessation of work, smaller wages for the workmen and fewer hands employed."

"The democratic party also declared for what the silver men and some of the gold men believed to be free coinage, and it declared also for State banks. Now that the smoke of the battle has passed away and the people are brought face to face with the present difficulties," he was asked.

"I have no legislation to propose beyond the repeal of the Sherman law and the return to the monetary laws which existed before 1873. I have no doubt that the operation of the Sherman law has helped to bring about the present crisis. There is also a great deal of history connected with it, that a great prosperity came in waves. When the wave comes times are good, money is easy, the government is in good hands, and everybody is prosperous in a degree. But there is a crest of the wave soon formed, there is wild speculation, overproduction and extravagance. At last the crest of the wave will break and carry destruction with it."

"When we passed the Sherman act we were between the devil and the deep sea; something had to be done. A crisis was impending. I voted for the measure and am willing to take my share of the responsibility. Although I was not in favor of it. A canvass showed us that if we did not pass the bill the silver men would pass a free silver bill. About three-fourths of the democrats and one-fourth of the republicans would have voted for a free coinage bill. I voted for the Sherman law to prevent a financial crisis or a free silver bill. The measure was not passed. New England, New Jersey and Maryland, voted for the bill for the same reason. I urged in the campaign that the operation of the act be limited to five and then to ten years, but the amendment was not accepted."

"I believe now that if we had let the crisis come, the country today, even with the thermometer at 90 degrees in the shade, would have been more comfortable. The crisis would have come and we should have recovered."

"I think it would be well to go back to the currency law which existed before the blind law. Gold was coined at the mint free of charge. Silver was also coined upon the payment of a charge by the owner of the bullion, and if not enough for the needs of the treasury was authorized to buy in sufficient quantities. In this way the demand and supply regulated itself and silver was not driven out of use. I do not believe in dispensing with silver. It is an arrangement which, made, why not fix a new ratio between gold and silver based on the present market value? No such ratio would be permanent. It would have to be changed from time to time as the production of gold or silver increased. But I think a fair ratio fixed now would last 20 years."

"I have not much faith in the settlement of the currency question by international congresses. The European idea of the use of silver is different from ours."

"What is your opinion on the Hawaiian question?"

"I am not in favor of annexing Hawaii, but I think we should take care that no other nation gets the islands. If we should annex the islands, it would be only a question of time when we should admit them as a State. They would then have two senators and be as powerful in the Senate as the State of New York. This is only one of the many good objections which have been offered. I think the United States ought to make a close treaty, practically establishing a protectorate over the islands, keeping American influence predominant and making their interests identical with the interests of the United States."

"What do you think of the Russian treaty? You have read it, of course."

"Yes, I read it when I was a senator. It is a good treaty. There is no danger that political criminals, as known in this country, will suffer. As to those who put poison in the czar's tea, throw bombs into his bedroom or blow up the trains on which he travels, I think there is no objection to punishing them. The Russian people are not in a condition for any form of government except an autocracy. The colored population of the South at the close of the civil war were better able to rule than are the Russian people to-day."

Ex-Senator Edmunds is on his way to his home in Vermont from California, where he has spent the winter. He looks well, and says he is feeling much better than when he was in active political life. He will remain in this city for about a week.
