"Presh Water" Regions.

The yachtsman's vocabulary is a langage in itself, and the landsman often runs afoul of it. He doesn't see why the rope should be called a sheet, another a halyard, a third a downhaul and fourth a clewline. One boat owner, whose hospitable deck is trodden by many of his friends, has modified his terms to conform with the suggestions or mistakes of his guests who are not expert sailors.

For instance, one landlubber who had gone below for a drink of water was taked what he had done with the cup. "I hung it on the post," he said inspecently.

moently.

Every one reared at the idea that he could be so "green" as not to know what the mast was called, but on that yacht the mast is now known as "the

A pretty girl from a "fresh water" district was responsible for another nau-tical word. The strips of canvas used in tying up the sails are called stops. Some one wanted the stops and could not find them for the instant.

"What are you looking for?" asked the young woman.
"I am looking for the stops. They were here a little while ago.

"The stops? Oh, you mean the tapes.

They're under this rug."

And now the sails are bound with

"tapes."

Another young woman from an interior state had read enough nautical terior state had read enough insutted stories to have caught a few phrases here and there. For one thing, she knew that "hard task" was a staple article of diet at sea. On a visit to the cast this damsel went sailing. She was anxious to learn, and when she heard the man at the wheel say "hard a lee" she asked some questions and found out what it meant.

what it meant.

A little later the steersman said the racht was going about. Some of the guests were paying no attention and seemed in danger of being struck by the boom as it swept over to the other side of the reads.

"Hard tack! hard tack!" cried out the young woman excitedly.

All managed to duck their heads in time to escape the spar if they didn't know what the maiden meant by "hard tack," and another joke was added to the yacht's store of them.—New York Tribune.

A striking account of the difficulties attending on the attempt to extend the practice of vaccination in India is given by Surgeon General Sir William Moore. The chief obstacle is superstitious prejudice. The population firmly believe variola to be matter under the control of the goddess "Mata," in whose honor temples abound and fairs are held, where thousands of women and children attend with offerings. The declivities of most of the numerous conical hills present either a reddened stone or temple devoted to "Mata," with most probably an attendant Brahman priest.

Nearly every village has its goddess of smallpox in the immediate locality, and in many places a large piece of and in many places a large piece of ground is esteemed holy and dedicated to "Mata." The people do not pray to escape the affection, unless in seasons when it occurs with more than ordinary virulence. They do, however, petition for a mild visitation but even the loss of an eye does not a mear to be viewed. of an eye does not appear to be viewed as a very serious calamity.

"Is there not another eye gufficient for all purposes?" questioned one of these stoical philosophers. "If it were the leg or hand, it would be different, but an eye is immaterial."—Notes and Queries.

A patient in an insane asylum imagined himself dead. Nothing could drive this delusion out of the man's brain. One day his physician had a happy thought and said 'to him, 'Did you ever see a dead man bleed?'

"No," he replied.
"Did you ever hear of a dead man.

"No," he replied.
"Did you ever hear of a dead man bleeding?"
"No."

"No."
Well, if you will permit me, I will try an experiment with you and see if you bleed or not." The patient gave his consent. The doctor whipped out his scapel and drew a little blood. "There," he said, "you see that you bleed. That proves that you are not dead."
"Not at all," the patient instantly replied. "That only proves that dead men can bleed."—Yankee Blade.

Evils of Anxiety.

Anxiety is the poison of human life.

It is the parent of many sins and of more miseries. In a world where everything is doubtful, where you may be disappointed and be blessed in disapdisappointed and be blessed in disappointment, what means this restless stir and commotion of mind? Can your solicitude alter the cause or unravel the intricacy of human events? Can your curiosity pierce through the cloud which the supreme being hath made impenetrable to mortal eye? To provide against every important danger by the employment of the most promising means is the office of wisdom, but at this point wisdom stops.—Selected.
