

SIX HUNDRED CARS A DAY MAXIMUM SET FOR NEW OVERLAND FACTORY

Four hundred and fourteen cars were shipped from the Overland factory on May 10. This is 25 per cent greater than the largest number of cars ever shipped from the big Toledo plant on any single day previous to that time.

Although it is a remarkable record, this great shipment is merely a step in the tremendous manufacturing and selling campaign which the Overland Company finds necessary in order to meet the demand for cars. A few weeks ago John N. Willys, president of the company, announced that upon the completion of buildings now in the course of construction, the daily output of the factory would be 600 cars per day.

Overland officials declare their intention of occupying portions of the new buildings by June 1. One of these structures is probably the largest single factory building in the world, being 1,000 feet long, 200 feet wide and four stories high.

In the meantime the enormous Toledo factory is steadily increasing its facilities for building and shipping 600 cars a day. Today 9200 men are regularly employed in the Overland shops, many departments of which are working both day and night.

More than 2000 cars left the factory during the week ending May 15. To carry these shipments 617 freight cars were required—or a single train more than five miles in length.

In spite of the increasing number of cars leaving the factory daily, it is declared that the orders are continually in excess of shipments.

Upon his return from California a few days ago Mr. Willys stated that the tremendous output for the coming season was based entirely on actual business conditions as they are today and on the demand for Overland cars as voiced by his dealers.

"The most careful survey of the motor car market has convinced me that the coming year will be the biggest in the history of the medium priced car," states Mr. Willys. During the past six months, when conditions were declared exceedingly poor by many business men, the sale of automobiles broke all previous records. And now that this country has so far recovered from the financial shocks incident upon the war, the demand will be much greater.

"Our 4,000 Overland dealers are constantly clamoring for more cars. During the past few months we have been continually working our factory at capacity. We have broken record after record in shipments, yet we have not been able to keep pace with the influx of orders.

"We are not over sanguine in deciding upon a production of 600 cars a day. In fact, I do not doubt that the demand for our cars will be far greater than we can possibly supply."

HUNGRY JOE AND BAD LANDS PARK RECEIVES LITTLE HELP AT LUNCHEON

The subject for discussion at the noonday luncheon of the Chamber of Commerce which was held at the Hotel Jordan on Tuesday, was "Hungry Joe and Bad Lands Park." The idea received positive support only from its sponsor, J. H. Mosher the jeweler, who presided at the luncheon and introduced speakers. The other members who spoke were Mayor A. A. Baker, R. A. Doty, E. C. Leonard and E. D. Giltner, all of whom were somewhat on the fence in regard to the proposition, the consensus of opinion being that at this time there are so many other matters of vital importance to be taken up, that the building of the highway through the bad lands be postponed until some future date.

Mr. Mosher's idea is not a new one, almost the same proposition having been advanced a few years ago by the Rev. English, pastor of the Episcopal Church in this city.

In an interview with Mayor Baker this morning, the genial D. D. S., stated that it was the intention of the city to expend all its efforts in the direction of securing clearer, not better, water and more of it, for the use of the people.

DAWSON COUNTY CLUB TO HOLD "SHIRT-WAIST PARTY"

Instead of holding its regular bi-monthly dance the entertainment committee of the Dawson County Club has decided to hold a dance on Friday evening, June 11th, which will be known as a "Shirt-waist Party."

Cards of invitation to the members have been mailed, stating that the program is to begin promptly at 9 P. M. and everyone is urged to be present and "Bring A Lady."

It is also stated that dances will be held during the summer, subject to the call of the entertainment committee, and that the regular dances have been discontinued owing to lack of patronage and the oncoming warm weather.

INTIMATE PERSONALITY STORY OF PRESIDENT WILSON—BY A MEMBER OF THE CABINET

(Editor's Note.—There is not an American alive who would not find it interesting to step into the white-paneled, circular room where President Wilson, the most watched man in the world today, is meeting the present gigantic issues of statecraft.

Draw one of the arm chairs across the green velvet rug to a place beside the great flat-topped desk of mahogany and talk with him about the torpedoes of the Lusitania. What sort of a man would you find yourself face to face with? Would he listen to you? Would he be influenced by you? Would he treat you with formal politeness or with real friendliness and interest? And what kind of a mind would he betray to you?

The answers to these questions concern us all, for in their answer lies for us the answer to the query in all our hearts today as to how successfully Woodrow Wilson is going to solve the acute problem raised in our country by the European war. There are few men in Washington who know the president intimately enough to give adequate and illuminating replies to these matters; with the exception of Col. House, his intimate friend, there are none, so far as anyone knows, outside of his official family. It was one of these latter Correspondent Burton addressed, asking him to supplement such vague knowledge as the public has gathered of Woodrow Wilson, the Man, from his store of more authoritative information. He has written the following:)

By a Member of the U. S. Cabinet (Copyright, 1915, by the Newspaper Enterprise Association.)

I wish every American could meet Woodrow Wilson and know the man as he is known to those of us who are his yoke-fellows in service.

I wish every American could know him as I know him and esteem him in the light of intimate personal contact with him.

What a unanimity of opinion there would be in America about the greatness of the man! How safe America would feel in any crisis, knowing that such a leader is at the helm, steering the Ship of State!

A Practical Man at the White House.

First of all, he would find that the impression created in the minds of those who think of the president only as the profound scholar is the last thing that fits him. The assumption that because all history is at his tongue's end and he is versed in theologies and sciences, the president is non-practical, theoretical, school-teacherish, is dispelled by even short acquaintance.

He would see at once that if he has to receive an interested ear, he would have to present his case in concrete terms; that President Wilson has no patience with those who dwell only in the clouds, whose thought is vague and uninformed upon practical issues.

And it is precisely that he was for so long himself engaged in academic work that he is this way. He knows too well the futility of the mind that wears its learning as a badge—a decoration for parade occasions and not a controlling influence in meeting the problems of everyday life.

Never Mind the Frivolities.

When he took the presidency of Princeton Mr. Wilson told the trustees that he would not consent to become the president of a country club; that he considered a college a place to get real education that would help students to interpret a right life itself in after years and not a place where social activity or athletic interests were the paramount issues, with studies as an annoying annex.

It is this way with him now in the white house; he is concerned with business of 100,000,000 people; it is a serious task with him, and the frivolities and the traditions of the office concern him not at all. In fact, one of his first remarks in the white house was:

"All the things I want to do, they tell me here in Washington I ought not to do, and all the thing I don't want to do, they tell me I ought to do."

So the American Citizen would find a man who thinks for himself; who throws all the light of learning upon material circumstances and arrives at—understanding. Surely it is demanded of him to understand all the phases of the question in order to apply knowledge to the service of his fellows.

But neither would any man find with a "closed mind"—with a mind already made up. He would find him open to all points of view, receptive of all information; but he would not find him any mere blotter that only drinks in without rendering any essence in return.

Not the "Closed Mind."

No, he would find him assimilating everything, rejecting the untrue or untimely, but seizing for his purpose all that helps in any manner to form the final conclusion.

It is as one of my cabinet brothers said to me: "The president is the only man I have ever seen who combines to such an extent the quality of openhandedness with the quality of determination."

What perfection in one mind!

I can illustrate to what amazing degree the president has this attribute of character by relating what happened in a cabinet meeting some time ago. We met, talking and joking, a little at first, as is usual at times when no grave international problem is to be considered—for the president is very human and likes to yarn as much as Lincoln did. Mr. Wilson read a document he had prepared. It was a message to congress, I believe. It may have been some other important paper, but it does not matter.

"Now, gentlemen," he said, "I should like your opinion on this, both as to subject matter and expression."

A Cabinet Meeting Described.

And then he laid the paper on the table and seemed to withdraw his personality from the document under discussion. He absolutely has no pride of opinion, no paternal feeling for his well-rounded sentences, no anything except that the document shall, in the clearest and most direct way convey the thought.

Of course, we knew he desired all of the ten members to speak their minds very freely on everything, so we started in. One said: "I wouldn't mention this," and another said, "I think it would be better to couch that thought in other terms," and so on and so on.

The president just sat still and listened while we analyzed sentence and opinion, pulling the document to pieces, or trying to. The process consumed two hours.

You might have thought that Woodrow Wilson was not heeding all that had been said, but the final document showed that nothing had escaped him, not a criticism nor an affirmation. But it also showed that he had analyzed each suggestion and reached his own conclusion on it. Only the greatest men conduct their minds in such a clear, systematic way.

Any American citizen talking to our president 15 minutes would realize all this.

The Kind of a President Wilson is That he is a man's ideal of a man come true! That he is instilled with belief in mankind; that he will listen to all, not alone with readiness, but with interest; but that he will place what each says under the lens of his attention; and finally that he will weigh all he hears, but take no one's word as final—that he himself will go to the bottom of original source for all topics that engage him, so that he will have a basis for comparing information placed before him.

The American citizen, after his meeting, would have acquired that assurance in the head of his government that springs from entire confidence in the perfect functioning of a superior mind coupled with a beautiful feeling for mankind.

With such a president we cannot fail to be the true interpreter of America's mission.—Fargo Courier-News.
