The Big Timber correspondent of the Anaconda Standard says: Purpura Haemorrhagica is a rare disease, but Theodore Porter of Stillwater, who is under the care of Drs. Moore & Moore, Big Timber, has it and lies critically ill. Black spots appeared first upon his lower extremities, thence extend to the upper extremities, trunk and head. These spots are called haemorrhagic spots and will bleed profusely upon breaking the skin. Spots of a similar nature appear upon the various mucous surfaces and often give away, allowing the patient to bleed profusely. Such is the condition of Mr. Porter at the present time, who is bleeding at the nose and also from the kidneys. The doctors are watching him closely and hope to bring him through all right. It is an interesting case and one that is entirely new to all but the medical profession.

Alvin P. Vinnedge, the representative of the Cooke City miners who has been in Washington during the past four months in the interest of the segregation bill to permit railroad construction to the New World mining district, returned Thursday morning. He says that while, with all others interested in the development of that rich and extensive mineral district, he had hoped for the passage of this measure demanded by the mine owners of Cooke at the session of congress just closed, he is in nowise disheartened. When it is considered that over 9000 bills were introduced in the house during the session and that but about 200 became laws, it is not strange that the segregation measure failed of passage. Mr. Vinnedge is confident that the measure will be among those reached early in the second session and that it will receive favorable consideration and become a law at that time. He says that Chairman McRea of the public lands committee, in whose hands the bill now is has already received assurances that his committee will be assigned several days early in the session and that the segregation bill will be among the first to be considered.
