

to the people of the

Francis T. Nicholls.

I am now discussing the influence of the lottery in people into the vice of gambling, its corrupting influence as a vice, before which its gambling has pale into insignificance. The time will come when this question will arise above political issues, and the people should prepare themselves for contest. See to it that no man gets you in the next Legislature, who has not pledged to do battle for the voter, and to use the best that is offered for his nomination. It is a bed of diamonds that became a snake—viperine. It went from the lips of the people, and cheering at the arm of the ballot box, at the ballot box, it had him in its power, and he was soon the son of his own ambition and corruption, and at the ballot box, he was lost. I have seen many a good man, who is to be pitied, to be sorry for, to be back.

to ... politics, is an issue in every State. Governor down to Con- been charged that this lottery controls the Legisla- members of Congress, it is our duty to fight this that is worse than hell it will also stand for the benefit all that I have placed the post department in the attitude of holding this scheme." The correspontent of the Graphic, walking in London the other day, came across a strangely attired man. He wore a furry woolen suit, cut as to coat like a Norfolk shirt or an artist's jacket, as to pantaloons, like a Mexican's trousers; velvet-furred slippers on his feet that displayed almost coquettishly vermilion-hued stocking; a bright red vest; an undaunted collar of red and white stripes, standing erect and encircling the neck higher than the latitude of the ears, and pointing in direct right angles over the nose in front; a white scented cork hat bound with satin ribbon, draped with silk cords around the crown, while from out of this oddly appearing figure, and from its upper end, peered a face so shrewd and jovial, in which shone so twinkling an eye, that one could not but join in the pleasurable feelings so apparently fully enjoyed by the owner. He was leaning on his crutches, whose dainty shape and gold mounting almost deprived them of the painful significance of their presence. This was Capt. Mayne Reid. His general conversation is bright and cheery. He has a country house down in Herefordshire, where he raises sheep of many colors. He has their fleeces spun into cloth and cloth made into garments, and he wears the garments.

A Kiss by MOONLIGHT.—The Spanish student Victorian became desperately enamored with the personal beauty and charms of Prospina, daughter of the king of Naples. He frequently scaled the wall at night in order to steal a kiss by moonlight while the pale moonbeams were playing upon her chiseled features, and in one kiss in rapturous ecstasy he asked "What hast made thee so beautiful?" Was such a question propounded to our prettiest women these modern times, the reply would be, "I simply use English Female Bitter, which gives all voices and pains." It is the only known female beautifier and pain killer.

The struggle has begun and will be continued until one or the other yields; until the people triumph over this giant power by crushing it out of existence or yield obedience to its corrupting and contaminating influences. It will be desperate, sharp and decisive.

* Are you suffering from indigestion? If so, use your druggist for a bottle of Sherman's Prickley Ay Bitters. Taken as directed, it will cure you. These Bitters have now been sold in public for a number of years, before they were thoroughly tried, and give entire satisfaction.
