RIGHT TO FULL PARTNERSHIP

Writer Combats Idea That Women Should Be Looked Upon as Natural Dependents.

A woman's pocketbook, even though she belongs to the wealthiest families, has its distinctive limitation. This fact was brought out in connection with "self-sacrifice" day for the benefit of the National Suffrage association. Women who work for a living and who are economically independent, give more generously than do men. Women of wealth and leisure, on the other hand, from whom naturally most help would be expected, often have little money they can call their own with which to help the causes that appeal to them. What ever may be said of the unmarried daughter who is treated as a dependent in her father's house, it is a great injustice when a married woman is not looked upon as a full partner with her husband in all the business of life, but is compelled to occupy the place of a dependent asking favors of her husband. The wife who rears a family of children and who either performs or directs the work of the household ought to be looked upon as a full partner with her husband in everything he does, and be spared the humiliation of being made to feel she is dependent upon him for gifts, sometimes grudgingly bestowed. There are some husbands, possibly an increasing number, who share their incomes with their wives, or who consider that all their possessions are held jointly, but there are many men still under the spell of the day when, in the eyes of the law, woman was looked upon more as a chattel than a human being.—Leslie's.

"MARK" FOR THE BOOK AGENT

Mr. Gloom of the Town of Sniffles Bores His Inability to Fight Him Off.

"Some writer once said, 'A wise man learns something every time a fool blunders,'" grumbled J. Fuller Gloom of Sniffles, Mo. "If there is any truth to the statement why don't I quit bucking the other fellows' games as fast as they come to me? There don't need to be any new and enticing variations—I go right up against the same old tottering tricks again and again.

"I am now the proud possessor of numerous ornate lives of the great poets, a five-foot shelf of ponderous piffle, a gift-topped set of Mrs. Sigourney's woeful poems, all the secrets of the court of Queen What's-Her-Name, the deuce knows how many Dickens and cyclopedias, till the world seems flat with them; and yet, just as sure as I am a foot high, a few days after it is issued I shall be the owner in fee simple of the next work put on the market.

"What in the bhangnition is the matter with me, anyhow? Is it possible that I am not the wise and sensible person I have been flattering myself I am, but instead merely one of the fools from whom wise men gather wisdom?"

Good News for Fat Folk.

Fat folk, take heart. Would you reduce your overample girth lines and return to your former sylphlike selves? It's easy—likewise pleasant. All you need is moral courage and a bunch of celery. Sounds reasonable, eh? This was the cheering information which seeped into various show shops and lobsterias today, and caused no end of happiness to some of those who are getting to the point where increasing avoirdupois is greatly endangering their several chances for artistic or financial success. Half a dozen front row girls and several stars have reduced from the heavy-weight to the bantam weight class lately. "How did you do it?" is the question asked. And the reply is "celery." Celery for breakfast, celery for lunch, and celery and a glass of water for dinner. "If you follow this diet for a month you can take off 25 pounds," said a Broadway favorite. It is believed that a large number will go to the "moral courage and celery" cure with a rare relish during Lent.

The Friends You Are Fondest Of.

The friends you are fondest of are always the kind that really call you up or go out of their way to see you or be in your company. They love you when they are with you, but you have to do all the going and coming. When you reproach them with not telephoning you or letting you know they have come in town they "have been so busy!" Did you ever know it to fail?

And the ones you like fairly well but are not enthusiastic about ring you up and ask you to dinner, and send you tickets, and try to borrow money from you, and act just the way you would prefer your dearest friends to do!—James Montgomery Flagg in the American Magazine.

Value of a Quart of Milk.

When you sell a quart of milk for seven cents you are giving more food for the money than the buyer can get in most other forms. It is twice as cheap as mutton or fresh fish, six times as cheap as dried beef, nearly three times as cheap as beef chuck, 40 per cent cheaper than pork loin, three times as cheap as beef sirloin, nearly three times as cheap as eggs. The staples that cost less in proportion to feed value than milk are such things as potatoes, rice, dates, corn meal, prunes, cheese, wheat bread and beans. The above figures will hold good in the average interior regions of the nation.—Farm and Fireside.

MAKE MONEY FROM SEAWEED

Inhabitants of the Island of Guernsey Have "Farms" Regularly Allotted to Them.

The strangest "farms" are the seaweed farms of the island of Guernsey. Held in common by all the farmers of the neighborhood, a "farmers' council" allots to each man making application a strip of the seashore, and all the seaweed that is cast up within these limits belongs to him.

Great bowlders mark the boundaries of the farms, which are from 200 to 600 yards of shore, and if any man gathers seaweed from any other man's farm or moves the bowlders to extend his boundaries the council takes his farm away from him and fines him besides. The seaweed harvest is at its height during the months of July and August, and all that a man need possess to gather it is a two-wheeled cart and one of the sturdy Guernsey ponies, a couple of long-handled pitchforks and a rake.

The seaweed or "varech" as the Guernsey people call it, is used as fertilizer on the inland farms, or is sold to manufacturing chemists, who extract iodine from it.

In the old days, but not now, the great Guernsey "harvest home," which was held usually in May, at the conclusion of the winter season, was the chief festival of that quaint island. The last load was piled upon the carts, and the men and women in holiday dress marched at the head of their carts with their ponies gayly bedecked, singing old sea songs and dancing to the sound of the women's tambourines. From village to village they went until darkness came, and then a huge bonfire was lighted on the seashore and the "varech" season was officially declared at an end.

NICKNAME STUCK TO SENATOR

Frontiersman Responsible for Sobriquet by Which Missouri Statesman Was Always Known.

Senator Barton, one of the two first Missouri senators, was known as "Little Red." He got the name when he delivered a speech which made him famous throughout the country.

The senate chamber was crowded. Barton had taken side against the Jackson policies. His arraignment and condemnation of the administration for years ranked as one of the greatest speeches ever heard in the senate. The audience became intensely excited. At the close, while people were crowding out of the gallery, there came a mighty shout:

"Hurrah for the little red!"

This was repeated again and again in the corridors of the capitol by the Missouri frontiersman who had been a listener. When the man became calm enough to explain he said the original "little red" was a game rooster he owned which could whip any fighting cock matched against him. When he heard Senator Barton "putting his licks" in the Jackson crowd and "bringing them down every flutter" he couldn't help thinking of the victories of his "little red." The newspapers took up the story and Barton went by the sobriquet of "Little Red."

Even Crabs Have Instinct.

Everyone has heard of the homing instinct of birds and of insects, but it is rather a surprise to be told that animals as low in the scale of nature as crabs have a similar instinct. The experiment has been tried in England of capturing crabs, marking them for identification, and releasing them long distances from their homes. The most interesting example was that of a male and female captured together in a trap and carefully marked, and then taken long distances away into another county and released at different places far apart from each other. Later the two were caught together again in a trap in their original home, showing that they had not only returned to their home, but had found each other and had again mated. The homing instinct had enabled them to go from the county of Lincolnshire back to their original home in Yorkshire.

Indoor Gardens.

Rooms without growing plants are never really perfectly satisfactory in spite of the change of furniture from one place to another, its readjustment with fresh color from time to time. There must always be moments when the inanimate room bores or stifles one, but never a time when a plant lifting up its branches for the blossoming time will not win your response, your desire to aid it, your joy in its triumph.

Indeed, a very cold, bare and plain room can be made cozy and inviting by the introduction of a few blossoming plants. In the summer time they connect you with the garden, in the winter they shut you away from chill and frost, with color and fragrance they welcome your friends.—The Craftsman.

Use New Words.

The words we use every day make up our vocabulary, and it is a very good thing that our vocabulary should be as large as we can possibly make it. The best way to accomplish that is to use as many new words as possible as often as we can. Then we get accustomed to them and they are part of our vocabulary. But we must be sure that we understand their meaning, and that we use them in the right place. It is better to choose short words rather than long ones.
