PALESTINE, TEXAS, MAY 5, 1906.

MISREPRESENTATION.

Colonel Tom Campbell is a candidate for Governor. He says "all the subsidized newspapers are opposing me." The Register herewith propounds some questions that it would be glad to have Colonel Campbell answer: (1) What does he mean by "subsidized newspapers?" (2) What newspapers are subsidized? (3) Who subsidized the papers? (4) How were they subsidized? (5) Why are they subsidized? Register is an inquirer after facts. If it publishes a statement it has to back that statement up with facts. If Colonel Campbell is correct in his statement that there is a subsidized press and that such press is opposing him, the Register would like to know about it, and as a Texas enterprise and a Texas newspaper, it has a right to know, and would thank Colonel Campbell to answer the questions propounded above.—Sherman Register.

Does the Register mean to deliberately misrepresent Mr. Campbell? Here is every word that he said about the newspapers in his opening speech at Athens:

"The grafter is against me, the machine politician will fight me, every Railroad corporation in Texas and every newspaper under their domination will oppose me with untiring effort."

Now, since the Register has asked Mr. Campbell a lot of questions that need no answer, will it be fair enough to publish the truth about what he really said? Will it?

Garfield says the oil trust is both a thief and a liar. We have long suspected it.

Good services will be held in all the churches tomorrow, and a cordial invitation is extended to all to attend.

The president's attempt to ride the bucking senate is a more exciting experience than his trying to break that bucking broncho in the Bad Lands.

In the meantime the county candidates are a very busy lot of men. Where two or three are gathered together a candidate will be among them.

Dowie must be envious of all the big things that are happening to push his halo to one side. He finds it very hard to hold the center of the stage for any great length of time.

The Bell people are wearing small bells. If nothing louder happens in the Bell campaign than the opening speech of that gentleman the bells will be needed to keep the crowd together.

As soon as the railroads cut off free passes, the Republican representatives jumped on the railroads with practical unanimity and are now further demonstrating their courage by kicking decrepit government clerks.

Smith county has about wound up its strawberry shipments, and while the season did not last long the growers express satisfaction with results, and say they made good money. By next season Anderson county will be in the heavy shipping column.

With the president scurrying around after cabinet material and Secretary Taft appealing for help to make up his mind, the senate all mixed up on railroad rate regulation and the Republican members of the House trying to show the dear people how they love them, Washington is having all the political excitement it cares for.

JUDGE BELL'S SPEECH.

Judge Bell's speech at Hamilton yesterday was in every respect a dignified utterance. It rubbed nobody's hair the wrong way. It was just such an address as one might have expected had the millennium already been ushered in, with the octopus and the citizen lying down together and brotherly love permeating every department of civilization. Judge Bell recognizes the possibility that there may be room for improvement in some directions. If there is, he is willing for the improvement, but not if it makes too much noise. He does not appear to be strenuously in favor of anything, nor is he strenuously opposed to anything which involves any marked disturbance of the status quo.

The speech is significant in its indorsement of the present administration as well as in its expression of utmost satisfaction with the former official record of the candidate himself. He believes everything should be all right, and he hopes everything is all right. In no respect does Judge Bell indicate great constructiveness such as Hogg had, and where he takes issue with his opponents he does not advocate with positivity any substitute plan of his own. Those who are looking for a sizzling campaign of hard fought issues will not have their expectations confirmed by anything Judge Bell said at Hamilton. So much for the general tone of the speech.

Judge Bell's speech is not without its attractions, however. He is a true friend of education. He wants the constitutional requirements of a six months' public school term enforced, just like all of his predecessors have desired, and to this end favors the submission of a constitutional amendment, providing for the levy and collection of a county ad valorem tax. He indorses the industrial education movement which the Post has been persistently urging upon the State, but there is no way to ascertain how far he would be willing to go to bring about this great reform.

On the question of taxation, Judge Bell recognizes that improvement may be possible. He is opposed to Colquitt's plan to separate the objects of taxation for State revenue from the objects of taxation for local revenue, but submits no definite system of tax reform that will remove the injustice and inequality of the present system. He thinks a constitutional amendment will be necessary before the State can secure an entirely satisfactory assessment law, but fails to indicate just what change would bring about the reform that is demanded. He is opposed, and properly so, to an exemption of homesteads from taxation.

As for prohibition, he regrets that the subject should have been mentioned. He is opposed to State prohibition and would oppose the submission of a prohibitory amendment. He favors the regulation and restriction of the liquor traffic through local option laws, and makes it plain that he believes local prohibition would be desirable in some cases and undesirable in others. On this question, Judge Bell's position is both conservative and sensible, and refreshingly candid.

Judge Bell favors a State department of agriculture, a home for destitute widows of Confederate soldiers, the working of convicts on State account rather than the lease system or the employment of convicts on public roads, except where the counties may lease such convicts, the investment by insurance companies of a portion of their earnings within the State, ample provision for the insane, the enforcement of criminal laws and, unless we fail to comprehend the tenor of his speech, the greatest conservatism in dealing with the railroads and other corporations.

Looking at the speech as a whole, however, we would say that if the other candidates seem to lack conservatism, it must be because Judge Bell has simply cornered all the conservatism that was to be found, leaving none for the rest. It is the most conservative speech that was ever made by a candidate, with possibly one exception, since reconstruction, and proves that Judge Bell is inclined to the belief that if any reform is at all needed in Texas, it should be administered in homeopathic doses.

All fair-minded men must recognize, however, that Judge Bell is an able, clean man, a citizen without guile, a man of conspicuous intelligence. Possibly the remarkable exhibition of caution, which many will construe as lack of positive force, may be attributed to his judicial temperament and training. There is no reason to doubt that he would give the people a conservative, careful, let-well-enough-alone kind of an administration, one full of the blessings of peace and concord, but if there are vital issues pending and important things to be accomplished, there is nothing in Judge Bell's speech to indicate that he would be a great leader in great emergencies.—Houston Post.

The Christian Church Meeting. There was another delightful service at the Christian church last night. The singing was perhaps the best of the meeting thus far. It is a privilege to listen to songs sung with such feeling and enthusiasm. A special feature last night was the quartet, composed of Mr. and Mrs. Zeran, Miss Kellar and Mr. Massey. The closing duet by Mr. and Mrs. Zeran was beautiful and inspiring.

Rev. Northcutt spoke on the subject, "Three Chapters in Human Life." The sermon was based on the parable of the Prodigal Son. The first chapter was the home life. The importance of this was emphasized. Then came the wandering and riotous living which ended in famine. It was said that sin always is followed by a famine in men's lives. Several touching instances were given. The last chapter was the home coming and the joy and peace that followed. In conclusion it was said that Our Heavenly Father is always glad to welcome the returning wanderer, and all who have wandered from Him were urged to return. Two accepted the invitation.

The subject for tonight, "How to Be Happy," should be of interest to all. Do not fail to hear it.

Tomorrow at eleven o'clock the subject will be, "The Great Citizenship." At night, "Pardon, its Means and its Evidence."

Special music at every service.

Enjoyable Evening.

On last evening at the hospitable home of Rev. and Mrs. Thos. H. Morris, the members of the Centenary Methodist League and their friends enjoyed one of the most glorious evenings they ever had. It was formal and yet delightfully informal, with studied perfection in every point. There was a large crowd present, and all were made to feel that they had had special attention paid to them during the evening. Music, forty-two, tracing cobwebs, etc., were the amusements indulged in, which was one continuous round of pleasure, beginning early in the evening at the parsonage and ending late at Booth Bros., where the lateness of the hour forced the guests to say good-bye.

No doubt these evenings with the League will hereafter be anticipated with more than double interest.

On and after June 1st, 1906, we, the undersigned laundries, wish to announce that all laundry must be paid for on delivery.

The great number of small accounts, when not collected at time of delivery, are a constant source of trouble and dissatisfaction to proprietor, driver and customers.

While we are aware that this departure from the present way of doing business will entail for the time being, perhaps, a little annoyance, we feel confident that the new method will be in the end the most satisfactory for all concerned.

Hoping that our patrons will look at this from a business standpoint, and that our pleasant relations may continue, we are
