SCORES LIQUOR PEOPLE

Twenty-Five Hundred People Attended the Johnson Speaking at San Antonio Last Night.

San Antonio, Texas, June 16.—As if electrified by some sudden power, Cone Johnson of Tyler, candidate for governor and advocate of statutory statewide prohibition, switched from the usual course of his speech, while speaking to about 2,500 persons in Beethoven Hall tonight following an insinuating question from an auditor in the rear, and with searching epithets condemned the liquor traffic and the American saloon in what was beyond doubt the most sensational prohibition discourse ever delivered in San Antonio.

He sprang a charge that the whiskey interests of Texas spent money lavishly at Austin during the thirty-first legislature to bring about the defeat of submission in that body; that the "same crowd" is conducting the present fight against the submission of a statewide prohibition amendment to the constitution and that the speaker could produce the proof of his assertion. He had finished commenting on this and was making the statement that the very base of the so-called doctrine of personal liberty, espoused by Colquitt, lies in "the taster," when a man who was standing at the back of the hall, shouted: "What right have you to preach to these people, what they should do? What have you—" audience sent up a clamorous, thunderous roar of approval.

The belligerent spirit of the speaker had been thoroughly aroused. The questions of the man seemed to stir him to battle and he talked as he had not talked in this strenuous campaign. His coat sleeves were drawn back and he walked up and down the stage denouncing and condemning intoxicating drink and its purveyors.

RAILROAD OFFICIALS

Gould Line Officials Reached Here at 3:30 This Afternoon, and Inspected the Shops, Etc.

This afternoon a special train from the south, arriving at about 3:30 o'clock, brought to the city a number of Gould line railroad officials. In the party are: C. S. Clark, vice president of the Missouri Pacific; Kingdon Gould, son of George Gould; Mr. Estes, a prominent New York stockbroker; C. C. Middleton, assistant to Vice President Clark; Receiver T. J. Freeman of the I. & G. N., and Purchasing Agent Pryor of the Missouri Pacific. The party is making an inspection of the Gould properties in Texas. It was announced that they would make only a short stop here.

The sea of humanity was thrown into a tumult. There were roars and shouts from all sides. "Throw him out," "Kick him out" and "Put him out," "Shut up" were cries directed in a volley at the interrupter, the while Mr. Johnson gesticulated and made replies that were drowned by the yells of the people.

The voice of the man in the rear could still be heard as Mr. Johnson, with his right hand raised to silence the audience, fairly yelled: "Let that man talk! He has a right to question me. He is disturbed—that's what's the matter with him. He is disturbed."

Shouts and cheers and hurrahs for Johnson punctuated each of these sentences.

"I have the right to preach this doctrine because it is the eternal doctrine of right," roared the candidate; and he was still talking while the throng applauded and cheered tumultuously.

"I have the right to say it here because San Antonio of all places needs it," continued Mr. Johnson. Again the before praying women and crying children," he vociferated. "They are the words of the supreme court of the United States. There is where, the finger of the indictment was laid on the liquor traffic—an indictment that could not be answered in a thousand years. (Tumultuous applause.)

"It destroys the people. The injury that come from this thing leads to man's abasement. It takes away his earning capacity. It undermines his health. It disrupts the home. It fills our penitentiaries and asylums. It has sent thousands of men and women to hell. (Shouts and cheers.)

"That is what the court says. It says the consensus of all thinking people is that there is no greater source of crime and misery than the ordinary dram shop where intoxicating liquors are sold to the people." (Yells and applause.)

Mr. Johnson was fired to debate. Pausing in his burning criticism he thanked the man who questioned him for leading into the argument. Just before the question was put it seemed that Mr. Johnson was about to leave the prohibition subject and take up other issues. Now beads of perspiration covered his face and he mopped his brow frequently with his handkerchief.

"I am glad that my friend started me out on this line," he said, as he breathed hard. There were more shouts, and several persons cried, "He has gone now," provoking much laughter. "No, he hasn't gone," said Mr. Johnson. "He's there yet. He is my friend, or will be before I get through." (Applause.)

The individual was still in sight, raised his hand and made some inaudible remark, when Sheriff B. D. Lindseley wormed his way to his side, and shortly the man was seen no more.

At the conclusion of the address hundreds, some with tears streaming down their faces, crowded to the stage to shake hands with the speaker.
