Kipp Loses Case When He Tries Role Of Attorney in City Justice Court

"Parking" Cow on Street Brings Fine of $25 and Costs; Says He is Persecuted.

Twenty five dollars and costs, the latter aggregating $22.50, was the fine plastered on Frank Kipp Tuesday afternoon by Judge D. D. Harger. He was arrested for staking his cow on the streets of Caldwell and was further charged with having taken the cow from the pound where she had been placed by city officials. Kipp entered a plea of not guilty to both charges and demanded a jury trial. Curious Caldwell citizens well filled the council chambers at the city hall Monday afternoon when Kipp was tried. He acted as attorney in his own behalf while Frank Meek, city attorney, conducted the prosecution. Jurors, picked up on Main street, were quickly sworn in.

Neighbors of Mr. Kipp were placed on the stand and testified that the defendant had repeatedly "parked" his cow on private property or where she wandered onto the public highway. Everyone was cross examined by Mr. Kipp, the latter asking them if other domestic animals had not been "parked" in that vicinity.

It was not until Mr. Kipp began calling witnesses, however, that the real fireworks began. Frank Howard, chief of police, was subjected to a grueling examination by the defendant. That the city was persecuting, instead of prosecuting him, was the contention of Mr. Kipp.

"The theory of the defense" Mr. Kipp declared in response to a question by the court, "is that you are after me instead of my cow."

Directing a steady stream of question and comment at Mr. Howard, the defendant wanted to know if many city ordinances were not being openly and flagrantly violated.

"You said I was composing songs" Kipp threw at Mr. Howard. "Is that an offense?"

"Did I ever tell you it was an offense," the chief demanded.

"No, but you said I was composing songs," Kipp responded.

"Well, if I didn't, I should have" Howard shot back at him.

Here the audience broke into laughter and brought a warning from the court who said that the trial was a serious thing, not to be made into a burlesque show.

In his address to the jury, Mr. Kipp declared that he had done more to build up the city of Caldwell than any man who has ever lived here or who will ever live here. That this case resulted from spite work by the city was another declaration by Mr. Kipp. This persecution arose, he said, because he had been quoted in a Boise paper to the effect that closing bridges in town was a clear case of sabotage.

In ending his address to the jury, Mr. Kipp recited some of his "poetry" on taxes until warned by the court that such things had no relation to the matter before the court.

The jury brought in a verdict of guilty on the "parking" charge but acquitted Mr. Kipp on the charge of taking his cow from the pound without permission, the jury holding that circumstantial evidence introduced by the prosecution covering this point was not sufficient.
