Poor Boy's Quarter
Four men were playing quarters in a slot machine in the lobby of a Denver hotel the other night. They played in hard luck for half an hour, and then there came a lull. A messenger boy had been standing nearby looking on, and when the lull came he stepped up. He looked tired.

"I have just one quarter," he said in a low tone, and I intended to save it. But I'm going to play the $5 hole, and if I win I'll give all the money to my mother. It's time for the $5 hole to win."

He put the quarter in and pulled the lever. The wheel spun around and every man present waited almost breathlessly for it to stop. They all wanted the boy to win. At last the wheel stopped with a jerk and everybody looked to see the result.

The boy lost.—Denver Post.
