Pending Legislation.

Although the fish and game committee of the senate, through majority action of one, refused to have printed the new fish and game bill, providing a commission and making it legal for those who want to raise game for their own use to do so, the senate lent its disapproval by ordering the bill transferred to another committee, education, in the face of vigorous objections from the chairman of the fish and game committee, Johnson of Nez Perce. The majority of the senate expressed itself as being dissatisfied with what was styled an effort on the part of the committee to throttle the measure and give no chance for its consideration.

The proposed appropriation for the educational department will undoubtedly be curtailed sharply. The general feeling is that too many trimmings have been permitted under the circumstances as to tax possibilities and that educational institutions will have to submit to a cut to a practical working basis if there is to be any material reduction in state taxation, that this can be done without impairing the effectiveness of necessary school work.

There is particular opposition to the manner in which the extension department of the state university has been permitted to expand, creating many positions regarded as unnecessary and a heavy expense. It is recognized that some work done by the extension service has been most desirable, such as the efforts at destruction of rodents, etc., but the vast expansion that dates from war times, it is felt, should be markedly deflated and the extension work put down to the absolute necessities.

One authority who has investigated the subject declares that if the extension department extends itself much farther most everybody else will have to move out of the state house. It is felt that if the extension forces are confined to essentials, leaving folks to work out minor problems for themselves, nothing necessary will be neglected, the expense will be materially reduced and a growing tendency to build up a great and not needed organization in a small state will be curbed.

Defenders of the extension department and its various ramifications say that Idaho will lose certain federal aid, but they are answered by the statement that this dollar-for-dollar plan of the government in this case, as with highways, is more profitable if rejected than if accepted.

The most potent argument favoring reduction in this connection is that, it being necessary to reduce taxation, these educational trimmings can only be retained at the expense of the common schools and of needed instruction in the established state educational institutions.

Indications are that the proposed law repealing the 2-mill state road tax act, and the direct primary proposal, will be acted on as party measures, although there are some signs of a rebellion against a binding caucus agreement. Opposition to repeal of the 2-mill road tax does not run to the merits of the proposal as a means of reducing to that extent the state tax levy but to the possibilities of a substitute taxation to take its place. The money, it is pointed out, must be raised in any event if the road building program is to be carried out and highways properly maintained. The only question is whether all property owners, or only a class, or two, will pay the bill. As a substitute a tax of 2 cents a gallon on gasoline is proposed; also a license of $1 or $2 on each person driving an auto. It is estimated that this will bring in a minimum of $500,000, or about half the amount furnished by the 2 mill road tax.

There is brisk opposition to return to the old primary system, which, it is contended, proved a dismal failure, although there is general disposition to correct anything shown to be wrong in the law providing a convention system. The present outlook is that the convention system will not be set aside.

We presume that there never was a newspaper in any locality that gave all the local happenings, says an exchange, and its article is so applicable that we reprint it: It is often that someone comes or goes that the reporter does not see. It happens that the family is missed several times. They get the impression the editor does not care to mention them. That is a mistake. In most country towns the local work is the hardest part connected with the newspaper. Editorial matter is obtained by study, by reading newspapers and by using the scissors. Personal and local happenings can't be read and clipped from other newspapers—not by a juggler. It takes physical as well as mental exertion to get out several columns of local happenings. Don't be afraid to tell the reporter that you have friends visiting you.

Peach Stones for Fuel
A 500-ton mountain of peach stones was recently thrown upon the New York fuel market as a substitute for coal. The stones were gathered by patriotic Americans in war time to be used in the manufacture of gas masks. They found a ready market at $1 a ton, and were distributed to the needy.

WOLF WAS THE MASTER OUTLAW

After a 9-Year Hunt Greatest
Animal Criminal Was Killed
In South Dakota.

The Custer wolf is dead! It was the master criminal of the world. For nine years it had lived as an outlaw—the cruellest, the most sagacious, the most successful animal outlaw that the range country had ever known. Its cruelty was surpassed only by its cunning. It killed with the refinement of animal ferocity.

The telephones throughout the region around Custer, S. D., hummed when the word went out that a hunter had killed the criminal wolf. That word ended the nine years' reign of dread during which the stockmen around Custer had paid tribute to the wolf to the extent of $25,000 worth of livestock. And mere money loss was not the whole of the horrible toll it took. When it killed for food, it took only the choicest animals, but sometimes it killed in atrocious ways for the mere sake of killing. Often it wounded cattle, breaking their legs, biting off their tails, mutilating them terribly.

Four years ago its mate was killed. It never took another and many people supposed that it devoted itself to revenge for her death. Later on, it attached to itself two coyotes, not as equals, but servants. Never permitted them to come near it, and they could feed from its kill only after it had finished. They traveled far out on its flanks, giving it warning of ambush or approaching danger and adding to the atmosphere of mystery that surrounded it.

After a bounty, reaching $500, failed to bring in the criminal wolf's scalp; after private trappers and sportsmen hunters had given up the quest; after poison and dogs had failed—the stockmen tried a round-up. Having, as they thought, located the wolf a large number of the riders started in a great circle and closed up. This, like all other devices, was unsuccessful. Some of the stockmen decided to send for a government hunter. Therefore the department of agriculture sent to Custer, H. P. Williams, one of its best hunters, with instructions to stay after the wolf until it was taken.

Twice in May, 1920, the wolf stepped on the jaws of traps and on the night of July 3 it rolled into or lay down on one and had a lot of its hair pulled out. This gave it such a scare that it left the country for a while. No signs of it could be found near Custer until the night of August 1, when it made its presence known by killing several head of cattle and wounding several more. Williams found some of these cattle, took the trail of the wolf and followed it all day. This led up to the mouth of a canyon and, knowing the wolf would be taking a sleep after its big feed, Williams tied his horse and started in. Just then two horsemen came up,

PORTLAND MAN GAINS 30 POUNDS

Morris feels Better Than in 20 Years Since Tanlac Built Him Up.

"Before I started taking Tanlac I was so bad off I couldn't do a lick of work, but now I am back at work and am thirty-three pounds heavier than before and feeling better than I have in twenty years," said R. R. Morris, 1615 Huron street, Portland, Oregon. "Twelve years ago I suffered a general break-down and I got worse and worse each year until finally I had to quit work. I was living in Colorado at the time and after spending lots of money on different medicines without getting relief I thought a change of climate was what I needed so I moved to Portland, but instead of getting better I grew worse. I had rheumatism in my arms and shoulders and the pains would go up my back into the back of my neck, and at times my wrists gave out completely and I could hardly pick up my hat. My appetite went down to nothing. Sometimes I even hated to go to the table and what little I managed to eat did me more harm than good. I lost weight and strength and was so weak I felt like there was hardly any life or energy left in me.

"Well, by the time I had finished my second bottle of Tanlac I was eating better, feeling better and picking up in weight right along. Since taking four bottles I have gained thirty-three pounds and feel just like I have been made over. The rheumatism has disappeared altogether and the pains in my neck and head have all gone. My big gain in weight shows that I have the finest kind of appetite, and nothing I ever eat ever gives me any trouble at all. I am back at work and never miss a day and I give the credit for my health and strength entirely to Tanlac.

Tanlac is sold in Emmett by H. T. Davis; in Montour by E. Vadney and the Montour Mercantile Co.; in Ola by P. W. Wharton.

riding at breakneck speed and calling to Williams that they had found a yearling steer killed by the wolf. Williams motioned them to go back but they did not understand what he meant and he was forced to return to meet them. Thus he lost the best chance he ever had of getting the wolf with a rifle. When he returned to the trail he found the place where the wolf had bedded down to sleep. The noise made by the horsemen had given it the alarm and it had gone back down the canyon very close to the hunter and escaped.

Early, in September the wolf stepped on a trap and was caught slightly by one foot. Apparently the trap had tipped so that it caught only one side of the foot and the wolf was able to pull loose. He left some hair in the trap. This happened again in the early days of October.

Williams finally got the wolf—October 11. Here is his own account of it:

"He stepped into a trap in the morning and it got a good grip on him. He ran with it about 150 yards when the hook caught in a tree, but that did not seem to stop him at all. He broke the swivel of the trap and ran on with it on his front foot. I trailed him three miles and got a shot at him and got him. He has been so lucky that I expected the gun to fail to shoot, but it worked. He is smaller than the average male wolf, weighed ninety-eight pounds, and measured just six feet from tip to tip. His teeth would be good for fifteen years longer. He broke some of them off on the trap, but aside from that they were in good condition. He is an old wolf with fur that is almost white."
