

A BITTER DISAPPOINTMENT.

Old Billy Jones, the plumber and gas fitter, goes about connecting gas pipes, tearing up defective sewers, and examining into the circuitous system of houses to such an extent that he has acquired a deep insight into the affairs of the first families. This morning he was rooting up a contemplated sewer for Mrs. Dobson, when that inquisitive woman, who has the keenest possible scent after lively scandal, came out and asked him the news.

"Not much going on," said the old fellow, jabbing his spade into the ground.

"What was the matter with Mrs. Smith's sewer yesterday?"

"It was blocked up."

"A lady?"

"Oh gracious! is that so? Ain't that awful! I always thought something dreadful would turn up in that family. Will it be in the papers?"

"I spoke so."

"And the Police Court?"

"Dunno."

"What kind of a baby was it—or don't you know?"

"Yes it was a rubber baby."

Mrs. Dobson was so grossly disappointed that she went right into the house and cried all the rest of the afternoon. And when her hand came home she got mad because he wouldn't go right out and trash that old brute for so grossly insulting her.—(Virginia Chronicle.)

A CURIOUS STORY.

We have from a correspondent a curious bit of information about the young commander-in-Chief of the Egyptian contingent on the Danube. Though but twenty-four years old, Prince Hassan, son of the Khedive, is an experienced soldier, and has already had his share of haps and mishaps. The young Prince received his military education at Woolwich and Berlin, where he occupied the office of Minister of War to his father. During the late war with Abyssinia he was seriously wounded and made prisoner. Although treated with consideration, King John, "to punish him," as he expressed it, "for fighting against Christians," ordered that a large cross should be tattooed on the back of each of the Prince's hands. This was done, and when his wounds were healed the young officer was released and returned to Cairo. Arrived at home, Prince Hassan consulted the best European and native physicians and chemists, and kept at it for some time, promising a large sum to any one who should rid him of these monuments of the Abyssinian King. Advice was freely offered and experiments tried, and the Prince underwent much suffering, but all in vain—the Christian crosses were indelible. In despair he finally resorted to a Jewish sorcerer, and the holy man communicated a remedy which, at least, had the merit of being undeniably efficacious. "Chop off both hands," he said to the Prince, "better live without hands than wear forever these signs of the infernal ghouls!" Prince Hassan relished it but little, and so remains to this day tattooed with the hateful symbols. This is why no one sees him without gloves.—(New York World.)

AN INSTALMENT SIGN.—A discussion arose in a hotel parlor as to the citizenship of a gentleman at the other end of the room. "He's an Englishman," said one, "I know by his head."

"He's a Scotchman," said another, "I know him by his complexion."

"He's a German," said a third, "I know him by his beard."

The ladies thought he looked like a Spaniard. Here the conversation rested, but soon one of them spoke—"I have it," said he, "he's an American; he's got his legs on the table!"

A Maine girl left her clothing in an open boat in order to frighten her parents, who posed her marriage to Jake. They found the clothes and took them home. She had to stay in the woods until it got dark, and then she went home, clothed in pocket-handkerchief and blusher. She says it was a Maine trick.
