CURIOUS EPITAPHS.

Odd and Humorous Inscriptions Discovered in Church-Yards.

When Benjamin Franklin was a young printer he wrote the following epitaph on himself:

"Here lies the body of Benjamin Franklin, Printer.
(Like the covers of an old book,
Its contents torn out,
And strip of its lettering and gilding.)
Lies food for worms;
Yet the work itself shall not be lost,
For it will [as he believed] appear once more,
In a new
And more beautiful edition, Corrected and amended by
The Author.

In the burial ground of Abbey Church at Conway, North Wales, the following memorial has been erected to one Nicholas Hooker: Here lyeth the bodie of Nich. Hooker, who was the one and fortieth child of his father and mother, and the father of seven and thirty one wife. He dyed March 20th, 1637. His act.

In the churchyard at Powsey, Wiltshire, Eng., Lady O'Looney's pedigree is given after this style:

Here lies the body of Lady O'Looney, great niece of Burke, commonly called the sublime.
She was bland, passionate and deeply religious; also, she painted in water colors and sent several pictures to the exhibition. She was first cousin to Lady Jones, and of such is the Kingdom of Heaven.

Elizue Yale, the founder of Yale College, is buried at Wrexham, Wales, under a tombstone bearing this inscription: Born in America, in Europe bred,
In Africa traveled and in Asia wed, Where long he lived and thrived, in London, dead.

Much good, some ill, he did; so hope's all even,
That his soul through mercy has gone to Heaven.

On that survive and read this tale, take care For this most certain exit to prepare, Sweet, best in peace, the actions of the just Sweet, and blossom in the silent dust.

Richard Lalor Sheil, the Irish orator and joint advocate with Daniel O'Connell before Parliament, who died in 1851, has the following remarkable epitaph on his monument at Waterford:

Here lie I. There's an end to my woes:
And my spirit at length at ease is,
With the tip of my nose and the end of my toes.

Turned up 'gainst the roots of the daisies.
A Liverpool lady, who died, was thus kindly relinquished to the Lord by her loving husband:

She once was mine,
But now, Oh, Lord,
I her to Thee resign,
And remain your obedient, humble servant,
ROBERT KEMP.

It is said to be an actual fact that the following is inscribed on a headstone at Oxford, N. H.:

To all my friends I bid adieu,
A more sudden death you never knew:
As I was leading the old mare to drink, She kicked and killed me quicker'n wink.

SUCCESSFUL DINNERS.

Congential Guests as Necessary as Tempting Delicacies.

A well-known caterer writes in the Chicago Tribune: I am frequently asked by fashionable people who are up in other things what is the first step necessary to a successful and satisfactory dinner. My answer is, first and foremost, be careful in the selection of the guests. No matter if you prepare a feast worthy of a conquering hero, unless the spirits about the table are congenial it will be a failure. One ill-bred man at a feast will spoil every thing. Of course every body can't talk well, and it is a good thing that this is so. A dinner composed of magpies would not be such a one as you would want to go to more than once.
But there should always be one good talker at least in a dinner party, and if he is the only one, so long as he isn't a bumptious fool and the others are good listeners, your dinner will not be a failure. I think Oliver Wendell Holmes must have been a splendid fellow at the table. And if I am informed correctly he is the man who said he had an admiration for the audacity of the man who knew how to talk across the table. It is your common sense, unconventional man who is popular. You never want to be too conventional in any thing, and especially at the table. Too much stiffness is as bad as too much boorishness. Unless you are giving a banquet fourteen is about the proper number for a dinner, and for an afternoon tea there should never be more than eight women. If these general ideas which I have given you are carried out, the object of your dinner being social entertainment, you needn't bother yourself so much about the menu.

The Colonel's Wrath.

New York hotel clerk (to bell-boy)— "See what the rumpus is in 621." Bell-boy (returning)—"Colonel Bluegrass is mad because there's a pitcher of water in his room." Clerk—"But that's not to drink. That's to wash in." Bell-boy—"That's what I told him and he got madder still. He wanted to know if they thought he was a heathen. He said he washed before he started away from home."
