HELP YOUR FRIENDS!

YOU ARE always glad to help your friends, and if you have found a place where everything sold is just as represented, why not tell your friends about it?

So much deception has been practiced in advertising that the public has learned to look with suspicion upon advertisements—especially clothing advertisements—as so many fake "sales" are being advertised. But people are inclined to accept what is told them by their friends, and you are not only helping us but doing your friends a favor when you tell them that

The Red Anchor Clothing House

Has an Up-to-Date Line of Men's and Boys' Clothing, Shoes, Hats, Furnishing Goods, Etc., and that it treats customers courteously; has the right prices and refunds the money for any article that does not give satisfaction.

We are glad to have our friends from a distance call when in town, whether they wish to purchase or not.

Washington Letter.

HON. S. B. ELKINS, WEST VIRGINIA'S SENIOR SENATOR, EXPRESSES HIS VIEWS

To Our Correspondent on the Best Way to Develop Our Waterways.

Washington D. C., April 30. (Special)—"I am hardly prepared to endorse a bond issue of five hundred millions of dollars to develop the waterways of the United States. I believe the current revenues will be sufficient to work out some comprehensive system of waterway development, covering a long period of years, but should current revenues fail to meet current obligations, then I would not hesitate to place an additional obligation upon posterity in order that we may have in the United States a perfect network of waterways as have the countries of Europe. I say this because posterity for all time will enjoy the vast benefits of such improvement and development."

Senator Stephen B. Elkins, who made the above statement, as chairman of the committee on interstate commerce and as a ranking member of the committee of commerce, is essentially an optimist. He believes in the future of the United States and in his conservative legislative work has reflected this optimism on numberless occasions. But Senator Elkins is not a dreamer, his early life having taught him that to do things is better than to dream things. A product of Ohio and raised on a farm, he was early imbued with the idea of securing an education and becoming a lawyer. After his graduation from the University of Missouri in 1880 he was admitted to the bar and afterwards at the close of the war, he went to New Mexico, which territory he represented in the Forty-third and Forty-fourth congresses. From that day to this Stephen B. Elkins has been interested in waterways and does not take any stock in the oft-repeated declaration that the railroads are antagonistic to waterway development in the United States. He says it will take both railroad and waterway to do the carrying business of this country.

"What we need most in the United States is some fixed plan for improving our rivers which can be made navigable by the expenditure of a conservative sum every year. Piece-meal appropriations are things of the past, so far as waterway development is concerned. We have been too careless and unmindful of the benefits and advantages of these great water courses with which nature has so bountifully supplied us and we have seen whole harbors and rivers closed up which could have been kept open. All this should be prevented and we should harness the rivers, seas and lakes to do their proportion of the work of commerce—building as railroads have. The railroad goes everywhere, the river has no feeders, except as it may now and then have a tributary for its course that is fixed by immutable law.

"While I am opposed primarily to putting a larger debt upon the American people I feel convinced that sometime this great waterway problem of development should be borne in a measure, or I may say largely, by those who come after us. When we have 125,000,000 of people, and that time is not very far away, we will need the water courses' help to handle our great traffic especially the heavier and bulkier freight. The river is a slow carrier, for great bulks can only be transported by barges in tow. The railroad is the express messenger to handle the lighter and more perishable freight. So that the river and the railroad have each its proper function and we should not be blinded to these conditions.

We are in the throes of our second waterway agitation largely due to the work of the National Rivers and Harbors congress. The first agitation followed hard on the revolution and in far reaching effect shared with the Declaration of Independence the distinction of having opened the most important era in American history. The agitation now going on gives abundant promise of a still more far reaching revolution peaceful though it is, than was ever contemplated in the far off days of Washington and Gallatin. We have reached the cross roads of the waters and it behooves us to build them not only for ourselves but for posterity.

Leander Bloss Dead.

Leander Bloss, a well-known citizen of this county, passed away at his home near Dickson, Sunday, April 25, 1909, aged about 73 years. His death was caused from burns he received some time ago, although he had been afflicted before receiving the burns with other complications. He was never married.

Mr. Bloss was born and raised in this county near where he spent his entire life and where he died. He was an honest, upright man, one of the most popular citizens of the county, and his loss to the community in which he lived will be sadly felt. He has living one brother (Harvey Bloss) and two sisters (Mrs. Henry Smith and Mrs. Jack Smith), all of whom reside in this county, and three sisters preceded him to the other world. He had extensive family relations on both the side of his father and mother, the latter being a Ferguson before she was married.

The body was deposited in the family graveyard near the late home of the deceased.

Notice.

I wish to state on behalf of my sister that acts of infidelity, extreme cruelty and willful neglect on the part of Fred Hatten toward her are the true reasons of Mrs. Clara Hatten separating from him.
