Traveler in Boston --- A Wife Who Cost Her Weight in Gold---Discovery of a Queer Citizen From Extremely Way Back.

Roston Transcript. A gentleman bound for New York by the 10:30 train Saturday evening looked in vain in the vicity of the old State House, Boston, for a herdic to take him to the station. Deciding that he must walk, he stepped into a well-known spa close by for a drink of hot beef tea. While sipping his best fortilier against cold waves, he noticed a District Telegraph signal box on the wall, and aske an attendant to call for a herdic for him. The young man complied, or thought he did but inadvertently he pulled the hool four times instead of three, and a police signal was rung in. It was about 10:15 and as the herdic did not appear within a minute or two, the traveler said he would toward the station. He had gone go toward the station. He had gone perhaps two minutes when a District mes-senger ran in and a sergeant of the polic-appeared at the door behind him.
