

MAGNETIC AS EVER.

ANOTHER RED-HOT CIRQUE DAY IN WHEELING.

Forepaugh Again Shuts Up the Populace—Scenes of Excitement and Confusion—A Fine Water-Treatment Well Attended.

The circus, the fulsome and the irresistible, with all its concomitant features, in the shape of peanuts, strawberry lemonade that never saw a strawberry, pies without works, and the side show that never dies, not to speak of the man who announces every five minutes in the circus that the "big concert immediately follows the show, when the world-renowned, remarkable, crown-dedicated prima donnas will appear right on this stage"—all these were there and more.

Same as of yore. So the people will remark on every circus day. But certain it is there are more really new and refreshing features with Forepaugh this season than have been seen here for many seasons.

The first section of the great show arrived here over the R. & O. about 4 o'clock yesterday morning, and a large crowd of sightseers gathered on the scene to peer at the curios and get in the way of the workmen. The last section of the show did not get in until 7 o'clock, but by this time the tented village on the Bridge Park was well under way, and everywhere there was a scene of bustle and activity. As the hours wore on the crowds upon the principal thoroughfares increased, all anxiously awaiting the out-door pageant, and a stroll up Market street about ten o'clock was like walking on a newly-made cinder track, so thick were the peanut shells strewn along the sidewalk. The procession put in its appearance on schedule time, and was much the same as those of former years, improved from the fact that the men looked fresher, the domestic animals sleeker, the carts, cages and chariots brighter, all coming from the fact that the show had but just started out on the road for the season, Wheeling being only the fifth stop since leaving the scene of their winter headquarters in Philadelphia.

But the wild animals had the same tired look that they did before the war, nevertheless they were interesting. There were a large number of rural residents in town during the day, and whole families could be seen at intervals straggling along and trying to keep together with no little difficulty. There is one thing that people never seem to be fully persuaded about on circus day and that is the time of going in the afternoon in order to avoid the crowd, and a chance to "look at all the animals." For fear of being late people began going over to the grounds as early as 11 o'clock in the forenoon, while noon found a steady stream of people pouring circusward. In the next hour and a half travel was slow and condensed over the big bridge and along the entire route. At 1 o'clock, and for some time thereafter, there was a deadlock of people and teams at the entrance to the suspension bridge, and the loaded Bridgeport horse cars carried but a mere mite of the whole number of people going that way.

There was no mistaking the scene of the circus. The familiar sound of all kinds of vendors was heard long before the grounds were reached. But once within, there you were under a canopy of canvas 420 feet long and 190 feet wide. The only fault to be found with the tent was its immensity, as persons seated at one extreme end had to guess largely as to what was going on at the other, and persons seated in the reserve seats near the centre had to overtax the optic nerve to catch everything that was going on in three different rings at once. The days of three rings should be relegated to the rear. Still the circus managers are considerable enough to make exclusive all acts of great moment, such as the Hanlon-Volters, great aerial acts, which were indeed remarkable. The program was well arranged throughout and contained many clever things, particularly the extraordinary rifle shooting of Capt. Bogardus, as well as the many exciting races at the close of ring features. There were also many mirth-provoking incidents scattered throughout the exhibition. The show gave good satisfaction throughout, and the children present, and there were scores upon scores of them in the afternoon, doubtless added several years to their lives by hearty laughter, eager gazing and natural wonderment.

The big tent seats 10,000 people, and it is estimated that about 8,500 were present at the afternoon performance, and nearly that number in the evening. At the close of the performance in the afternoon, through the courtesy of the genial press agent, Mr. Starr, the Register representative was enabled to take a peep at some of the interior workings of the portable institution, such as dressing rooms, dining tents, blacksmith shops, cooking cars and animal tents. Everything was carried on in perfect system and in good order, tidy and attractive. Even in the cooking department, and the tent where the hustlers eat, and where food of necessity has to be meshed up in a wholesale manner, everything was clean and inviting. While the employees naturally have a hard time on the road they certainly live well on the grounds.

The great Forepaugh took up its stakes and "guts" about 2 o'clock this morning, going to Zanesville, Ohio, where they show to-day; thence they go to Cincinnati, and then to St. Louis, taking in a few towns on the route. Then back into Ohio, they start West, expecting to reach San Francisco about next September, returning to Philadelphia by the way of the South.

Frank Kellogg, the Forepaugh detective, says they had gone over to see a friend off on the train and thought Bridgeport was Wheeling, where they had a permit to sell. One fakir sold three balloons for 25 cents, and was nabbed immediately. The other fellow was nabbed on general principles. Kellogg thought the superintendent was fooling. C. E. Lodge says it was not fair treatment and that the Bridgeport authorities were actuated by jealousy. He said the boys had to pay more than they made during the day. It is not likely that the Bridgeport officials would exceed their authority.

AMUSEMENTS.

A FINE PERFORMANCE.

Goethe's immortal "Faust" was produced at the Opera House last evening before a delighted audience, and in a manner never equalled on a Wheeling stage. The mechanical arrangements, the stage effects, which are highly important features of this play, were most ingenious and excellent. They must be seen to be appreciated and are so neatly manoeuvred that there is not a hint of "stage business" to distract the attention from the sentiment of the play itself. As to the Mephisto of Mr. Lewis Morrison little need be said. He may be called the originator of the character on the American stage, and the number of his performances run up into the thousands. Miss Florence Roberts is an ideal Marguerite, and showed herself to be an actress of exceptional talent and dramatic power. That her vivid and truthful portrayal of the beautiful character was appreciated was fully attested by the overflowing eyes in the audience and her frequent recalls. The play will be repeated to-night, and those who miss it will miss a treat.

OUR COUNTRY COUSIN.

On Thursday evening, May 7, the famous comedian, Frank Jones, supported by a strong company of artists, will give one performance at the Grand in his own melo-drama called "Our Country Cousin."
