

Take a cup of Arbuckles' Coffee and a cup of the "cent-a-pound-cheaper" kind. One taste of each will prove to you that the reason Arbuckles' costs a little more is because it's worth more. It's selected with greater pains, roasted with greater care, packed with greater skill. It comes to you as fresh as when it left the roaster. Not a particle of its strength or flavor lost. Cheap coffee lacks both strength and flavor.

ARBUCKLES' Roasted Coffee

is cheaper in the end than other coffees because it makes more cupfuls to the pound and gives far greater satisfaction.

With each package of Arbuckles' Coffee you purchase a definite part of some useful article—which is yours on presentation to our Notion Dept. of a certain number of signatures cut from the wrappers. You'll find a list of the articles in each package.

SATURDAY JUNE 23, 1901.

JULIAN HAWTHORNE professes to believe that it is wrong to execute a murderer, on the ground that the "violently detached soul of an unrepentant murderer" may continue a career of evil and do harm to living beings. It is not, however, as a ghostly apparition, searing people out of their senses, that Mr. Hawthorne fears these evil spirits, but believing them to be spirits "instinct with evil impulses, and bound to gratify them," after being liberated into the spiritual world, he says Christians cannot doubt "that such evil spirits find their activity in attaching themselves to embodied spirits of like genius to their own, and tempting and inflaming such to the commission of crimes." Mr. Hawthorne surely strays far from the good, old-fashioned belief that evil spirits on being detached or driven from their corporeal tenement, are kept chained in the bottomless pit, where Satan is supposed to make even the most unrepentant ones sorry for the sins done in the flesh. Mr. Hawthorne advances the idea that these evil souls become allies of Satan and aid him in working evil upon earth. It is a more comfortable thought to most mortals, however, that when once the devil gets his own, he keeps them within bounds, and that a dead murderer, though maybe not a good one, is at least dead for good so far as this earth is concerned.

Tiicano Talk

TO THE HERALD.

Tiicano, Tex., June 20—"The rain falls on the just and the unjust" in equal proportion, it is said, but it does not apply this year, for it has fallen on neither the one nor the other.

There is in all misfortunes something to be grateful for. In this country, at this time, the splendid wells of clear, pure water are the salvation of the country. True, they cannot be utilized to irrigate the parched soil without an outlay of capital, but that the time will come when capital will open its eyes and see where it could gain immensely, is beyond a doubt.

If this drought would endure until every poor old cow gave up the ghost, it would be a blessing. Some might not regard it so, but it would, and I'll tell you why. Just a few feet down is an inexhaustible supply of good water (better than that oil at Beanmoat) that could be utilized in irrigating fields of corn and cotton, to say nothing of the vast quantities of melons and vegetables, that could be put upon the market from here long before they could be produced in any other quarter of these United States. Why! What a doctrine! you say. Why we have no carrying facilities! Do you suppose that capital is going to construct a railroad over these arid wastes! Never! Go to work, irrigate your lands, with the cheap labor always at hand, plant pastures, raise fine cattle and horses, and while you are about it raise something to eat—don't go around looking so starved. Starved! Did you ever! Yes, you know you are. Lots of people in this county never see a vegetable from year's end to year's end. Not the Mexicans alone either—plenty of Americans never see one. Why? Simply because they are too careless to plant, cultivate and irrigate them, with water just a little below the surface of the ground on which they stand, too. Ah, well! Some day your eyes will be opened, and then who will say: "I told you so!"

ONE failure does not discourage a man of pluck and determination. It is the man that keeps on trying, doing his best even under the most adverse circumstances, who will come out a winner.

Drying preparations simply develop dryness; they dry up the secretions, which makes the throat sore and dehydrates, and is far more dangerous than the ordinary form of catarrh. The drying inhalant, known as the "Eucalypt" and used in the treatment of the throat, is a remedy that will not only dry up the secretions, but will also soothe the inflamed membrane, and will be found to be the most effective remedy for the throat. It is sold by the Eucalypt Company, 500 Broadway, New York, N. Y.
