MUSIC OF THE SPRINGTIME

CARUSO SINGS A STIRRING FRENCH MARCHING SONG

Gluck, Helfetz, Schumann-Heink, Braslau, Zimbalist, and other leading artists give new interpretations

ONE of the great war songs of France is "The Regiment of Sambre." It has done inestimable service in the past few years by re-kindling the souls with new fires of invincible courage. To hear it sung as Caruso sings it on a new Victrola Record this month is to become for the moment fired with the same indomitable resolution that possessed the soldiers of France to face whatever difficulties lie before us. Even though the war is over we all have battles of our own to fight and it is one of the great glories of music that it can at anytime be used to dispel whatever fear may gnaw at our hearts in moments of weakness.

"That Wonderful Mother of Mine" beautifully expresses the devotion and gratitude felt by all who have known a Mother's love. It is very tenderly sung by Henry Burr on a new Victor Record, and the refrain is repeated softly with a violin obbligato blending with the voice.

Another form of gratitude is found in "Salvation Lasses of Mine," sung by Charles Hart and Lewis James on the other side of the record. We all know what the Salvation Army women have done for the boys in France, and this charming vocal tribute will express the sentiments of many. The sweet harmonies of the two voices in the refrain will appeal strongly to all.

Among all the composers of chamber music Mozart has no rival, and among all organizations playing this form of music the Flonzaley Quartet stands in a similar relation to the interpretation of Mozart's "Quartet in D Major," by the Flonzaley on a new Victrola Record is Mozart, at his best, played to perfection. The "Quartet in D Major" is one of three, written at the request of, and dedicated to, Frederick William II, King of Prussia. Mozart was no courtier, here he remembered that Frederick played the cello; hence the exquisitely beautiful duet of the cello with the first violin, and the subsequent cello solo in this melodious Andante.

Gluck and Zimbalist interpret a timely hymn

The appeal of that hymn familiar to all church-goers, "Hour of Trial" is intensified by the manner in which Gluck sings it on a Victrola Record just issued.

Her voice rings out clear and firm, but the spirit is one of humility and supplication.

To this is added the divinely tender violin obbligato at the hands of Zimbalist, which comes like the voice of consolation from heaven. The accompaniment is provided by a pipe organ, the rich harmonies giving the utmost weight and dignity to the solemn strains. Now that we begin to realize some of the aftermath of the war, this hymn of penitence will appeal to many.

Mendelssohn's "On the Wing of Song" is generally regarded as the very best of his songs and it is this that Jascha Helfetz has chosen to interpret on a new Victrola Record this month.

So lovely is the melody that Liszt could not forbear making a piano transcription of it, and finally Achorn made the present violin piece. It starts as a G-string melody, played with the broad, full tone of which Helfetz is so remarkably the master. For the second verse the violin soars, sounding particularly effective by reason of the rich modulation which presents the melody in a new key.

Laura Littlefield gives a trio of interpretations on a new Victor Record particularly adapted for educational purposes. "When Daisies Pied and Violets Blue," sometimes called the Cuckoo Song, is the song which Spring sings as the epilogue to "Love's Labor Lost." "She Never Told Her Love" is the second selection. This was written by Shakespeare, not as a lyric but as a speech of the masquerading Viola to her lover, the Duke, in Act II, Scene IV of "Twelfth Night."

The third selection is "Orpheus With His Lute," the song opening the third act of Henry VIII. This charming soprano makes a distinct contribution to musical instruction for educational institutions by her delightful interpretations.

Trinity Choir sings

Dudley Buck's "Festival Te Deum"

Not many churches of America have choirs of sufficient size and skill to make the use of Dudley Buck's compositions practicable, but where such is the case they have been widely used. Trinity Choir is a Victor organization formed by some of the most noted singers in America, all of whom have held soloist positions in leading American churches. This Te Deum, which Trinity Choir sings on a new Victor Record, abounds in short solos and duets, which give pleasing variety to the richly flowing choral music.

The tone quality of this choir is excellent, presenting the Te Deum in a way possible only to the foremost churches in the great American cities, and it will be a revelation to those who know the anthem only through the average performance.

A delightful little Southern plantation song is interpreted by Sophie Braslau on a new Victrola Record, whose dreamy melody and soothing rhythm lull you, not to sleep, but into that warm dreamy wakefulness in which the mind is robbed of its cares yet the senses kept alert and glowing. It is entitled "Crown, Crown, Underneath de Moon," and is introduced by a captivating little melody which suggests the Southern atmosphere when the stars are singing together and the Western sky is "all a-golden bars."

To the voices of the orchestra and honey-sweet tones of the soloist is added the rich drone of men's voices singing in blended harmony.

The Sterling Trio presents a pleasing little song on a new Victor Record, "Some Day I'll Make You Glad." This is largely a tenor solo with rich harmonies in the accompanying male voice parts, and some delightful orchestral effects.

On the reverse of the record Arthur Fields sings in his own dashing style "Singapore," a song with a light Oriental tune and cheery story of the sailor man and the little Asian maid.

Snappy dance music by Joseph C. Smith's Orchestra

Glad Springtime! How natural to give expression to the resulting emotions in rhythmic motion of the whole being. And fortunately nowadays the best dance music is available at any time the mood or fancy strikes one. Here is Joseph C. Smith's—his favorite dance orchestra, with a quartet of breezy selections on two Victor Records just issued.

"Come On Papa," a medley one-step adapted from the song of that name contains also as the alternative medley "How Ya Gonna Keep 'em Down on the Farm (After They've Seen Paree)." It seems to imply that Papa may still have his uses.

On the reverse of the record appears "Dry Your Tears"—a medley fox-trot which introduces as a second number "Mummy Mine." The two make a splendid fox-trot.

The unusually rich string tone of Joseph C. Smith's Orchestra is particularly well adapted to the two waltzes which it plays on another Victor Record. "Mary's Lullaby" is a song which everybody has been eager to use as a dance number. Its swinging rhythm is irresistible. "Sweet Hawaiian Moonlight (Tell Her of My Love)" is an appealing number which has all the languorous beauty of the island scene its title suggests.

The Joseph C. Smith Trio—just a violin, cello and piano present "Mickey" on still another Victor Record. "Mickey" is a song which everybody enjoys; and heard in this novel form it is full of appeal.

"Kisses"—a fox-trot on the other side of the record, is also one of the big hits of the day, lively in style and quite as lingering in effect.

The All Star Trio, consists of piano, xylophone, and a saxophone with a rather more than human voice. Out of this combination comes music that no enthusiastic dancer would think of ignoring. It presents a copy of "samples" on a Victor Record just issued.

"I'll Say She Does" is a fox-trot with a few sudden hits that will give the trotter an opportunity; but the rhythm is perfect throughout. The medley introduces "Tackin' 'em Down." On the reverse the record "You're So Good Pretty Doll," another fox-trot, introduces the chorus of "There's Always Something Goin' Down in Dixie."

There isn't a dull moment in the whole record.

If you want to keep cheered up for weeks, just listen to Ja-Ba, a catchy little tune that sticks like a burr, as sung by Arthur Fields on a new Victor Record. Incidentally, it makes a rattling good dance number.

Ably assisted by a very jazzy band (with a trombone that fairly moans in grief) Billy Murray paints a sad picture of a dry world. "Alcoholic Blues" is in short, a lament over the passing of the Prohibition Bill, which will affect so many who find but little consolation in the soda fountain.

Schumann-Heink, who did such effective service for our boys during the world struggle, sings a selection on a new Victrola Record that is just in line with her sympathetic devotion to those fighting for the cause of democracy. Although the army bugle calls would not ordinarily prove attractive to a great singer, "Taps" is an exception. It is a musical setting by Mr. Joseph Pasternack, Director of the Victor Orchestra, of the last call that reverberates over the hills and fields of the camp at night. And Schumann-Heink sings it with most impressive effect.

"Johnny's In Town"—just think of it! He's back again, Clarice, after three months in Paris. And so Arthur Fields introduces him in song on a new Victor Record this month. It is a sure-fire winner, and the girls will be tickled to death to hear Arthur Fields sing about him. This tune may be effectively used as a two-step.

On the reverse of the record Billy Murray has an equally good one in "My Barney Lies Over the Ocean (The Way He Lied to Me)." The refrain is of course, a jazzy ragtime version of the old tune.

There is no kind of music the heart yearns for in the present day that cannot be provided with Aladdin-like celerity by means of the Victrola. One need not express his desire and preference to his nearest Victor dealer, each moment to hear his favorite selections in order to keep in touch with not only the music of the great masters interpreted by the world's greatest artists, but with all the latest popular vocal and instrumental selections of the day.

ANNOUNCING THE OPENING OF GROSSMAN'S Women's Fashion Shop

Grossmans are not strangers to the good people of South Bend and vicinity. We came to this city in 1892 and conducted business here until 1915, and are now returning to renew old friendships and endeavor to merit the friendship and patronage of all.

A women's fashion shop is not denoted by its size or quantity, but rather by the quality and correctness of style of each garment shown.

Our mission is to present for your inspection and criticism at all times women's fashions designed by masters in the art of combining style and individuality at popular prices.

More than 25 years of buying and selling women's wearing apparel has enabled us to give our patrons the benefit of our conservative and economical way of store keeping.

We cordially invite the public to visit us in our new store at our opening Saturday, March 29.
