Clubs Circles SOCIETY Suffrage Philanthropy

The wedding of Miss Edythe Louise Johnson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Q. Johnson, 723 George st., and Lester H. Kruger, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Kruger of New Buffalo, Mich., took place Thursday night at 8 o'clock at the home of the bride's parents. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Waldemar Goffney, pastor of the Zion Evangelical church before an improvised altar of ferns and palms interspersed with pink and white chrysanthemums. For the entrance of the bride party Miss Anna Luther played the "Bridal Chorus" from "Lohengrin" and during the wedding service she rendered "Traumerei."

The bridesmaids were Miss Mae Wedel, who wore a gown of pink georgette crepe with tulle trimmings, and Miss Muriel Carpenter whose gown was also of pink georgette with embroidered trimmings. Both carried shower arm bouquets of pink roses. The bride's gown was of white georgette crepe with accordion plaited trimmings. She wore a full length tulle veil and carried a shower bouquet of white roses and lilies of the valley. Mr. Kruger was attended by Olen Burg and Clifford Crisp.

A dinner was served immediately following the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Kruger will be at home after Nov. 1 at 1141 Oakland av.

Out of town guests were the Misses Leslie, Martha and Florence Kruger, and Arthur Kruger of New Buffalo and Paul Lukin of Hamlet, Ind.

Plans for the entertainment of their husbands on Thursday, Nov. 20, were made by members of the Ladies' Bible class of Lowell Heights M. E. church at the meeting held in the church parlors Thursday night. A buffet luncheon is to be served at that time and a program provided during the evening. Following the business meeting refreshments were served by Mrs. William Kleckner, Mrs. George Ewing and Mrs. David D. Gilliland.

Honoring Miss Mary Bosworth, representative of the foreign department of the national board of the Y. W. C. A., Mrs. L. J. Harwood, 925 Riverside dr., president of the board of directors of the local association, entertained at tea Thursday afternoon. The guests included the board of directors and the secretaries of the Y. W. C. A.

An all day meeting of the Rain-haw club was held Thursday at the home of Mrs. Norman Kizer, 752 Sherman av. Covers were placed for 12 at the dinner served at noon. Needlework occupied the time during the afternoon. The hostess at the meeting to be held Oct. 30 will be Mrs. Earl Camp, 754 Eighth st., River Park.

The home department of the South Bend Woman's club entertained with a family night party Thursday night. The club rooms, under the direction of Mrs. Conrad Adams and Mrs. Knowles Smith, were attractively decorated with corn shocks and pumpkins. The grand march, rendered by Barnes' orchestra, was participated in by the guests who all wore unique costumes. Alfred Malling, acting as judge, and Victor Paxson as policeman, afforded much amusement with their fake arrests and fines. Mrs. Victor Paxson was chairman of refreshments committee and Mrs. Karl King chairman of the general committee on arrangements.

Miss Pauline Treesh, 834 N. Scott st., entertained members of the Polyantha circle of the Trinity M. E. church Thursday night at a Halloween party. The 15 guests were entertained with music and games, prizes being won by Miss Dorothy McCague and Miss Margaret Geyer. The next regular meeting of the circle will be held Nov. 7.

The Woman's Home Missionary society of the Grace M. E. church held its regular meeting Thursday afternoon in the church parlors. Mrs. D. M. Beckner led the devotionals. Mrs. Nora Phelps read a paper on "Americanization and What It Is." Mrs. B. D. Beck gave a review of the history of the society and Miss Goldie Gunwald gave a violin solo. Mrs. E. C. Lane was chosen delegate and Mrs. George Gall, alternate, to the mission which will be held at the First M. E. church Nov. 18-19. Following the business session and program refreshments were served by the hostesses, Mrs. Frank Brobeck, Mrs. F. Beckner, Mrs. S. A. Korer, Mrs. Charles Wayne, Mrs. Herman Lang, Mrs. W. B. Schaefer, Mrs. James Gilliam, Mrs. Simpson and Mrs. Cox. The next meeting will be held in the church parlors Nov. 20.

Rev. and Mrs. Russell L. Phillips, 921 Cleveland av., entertained the members of the Foreign Missionary society of the Trinity M. E. church at their home Thursday afternoon. Mrs. Walter Larkins led the devotionals, and after the business meeting the following program was given: Two vocal numbers rendered by Mr. and Mrs. Phillips; a talk on the first chapter of the new study book, "The Crusade of Compassion for the Healing of Nations," given by Mrs. F. M. Holister, and a report was given by Mrs. F. L. Astell who was the delegate to the district convention held at Valparaiso last Monday and Tuesday. The remainder of the afternoon was spent in pasting postal cards to send to China. Mrs. H. J. Jackson, 1010 Vassar av., will be hostess at the next meeting which will be held Nov. 20.

The Children of Mary of St. Joseph's parish held their regular monthly meeting Thursday evening at St. Joseph's hall. There were 35 members present. Plans for a dancing party to be held Thanksgiving night were formulated and a committee composed of Miss Genevieve Winkler, Miss Rose Probst and Miss Mayme Davis was appointed to arrange a program for the November meeting. During the social hour Rev. P. J. Carroll gave a reading; Miss Mary Reynolds read an article on a trip to Iowa; Miss Irene Couch gave a vocal solo and Miss Marie Joyce rendered several instrumental selections.

The Ladies' Aid society of the Indiana Avenue Christian church met Thursday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Ralph C. Batty, 232 E. Pennsylvania av. Mrs. W. E. Minzes, wife of the visiting evangelist spoke on the work accomplished by the society. A social hour followed and refreshments were served to the 20 members present. Kitchen Economies

HOW TO MAKE DELICIOUS NUT-BASIS DISHES.

While the nuts are plentiful why not eat food costs by preparing the chief dish of the meal with a nut basis instead of meat? Nuts supply just as much nutriment as meat, have none of the unwholesome waste products of meat, and can be readily digested by young children. Walnuts, pecans, peanuts, almonds can all be used in conjunction with other ingredients and flavorings, so that the finished dish has a flavor that resembles meat. In fact, there are on the market several canned products manufactured by firms who make a specialty of vegetarian foods, and which are so prepared that they are truly meat substitutes as far as flavor and as well as food values are concerned. Some of them are made by combining soy beans and peanut oil, others by nuts and their oils.

These products are not expensive, as they are solid edible matter with absolutely no waste, and so very substantial they have to be combined with other lighter vegetables. But a pound of such a product will very easily serve four or more people, according to the method of preparing.

But you can utilize nuts at home even more cheaply. Even considering the waste of shell—which you pay for generously when you buy a pound or more of nuts—there is economy in the use of this food because it is highly concentrated, and a little goes a long way.

Nut and Cheese Roast.

1 cupful of chopped English walnuts,
1 cupful of cottage cheese,
1 cupful of breadcrumbs,
1-2 lemon,
2 tablespoonfuls of chopped onion,
1 tablespoonful of butter,
Salt, pepper.

Cook onion in the butter and add a little water. When tender pour off the water and add to the other ingredients. Mix onion finally and then pour all into a greased, shallow baking dish. Bake until brown.

Peanut Loaf.

1 cupful of peanuts,
1 cupful of cooked hominy,
1-4 cupful of breadcrumbs,
1 egg,
1 onion,
1 to 2 spoonfuls of chopped celery,
Salt, pepper.

Mix the nuts with the hominy, onion juice, chopped celery, and the seasoning and well beaten egg and pour into a greased, shallow baking pan. Bake in a moderate oven for about 30 minutes.

Walnuts or pecans can be used instead of peanuts, if preferred. Serve with a white sauce which has been flavored with some grated cheese.

Revelations of a Wife

Their Second Honeymoon

BY ADELE GARRISON.

WHAT DOES COUSIN AGATHA KNOW THAT MADGE DOESN'T?

I stared after Dicky in consternation as he left the veranda where we had eaten our dinner. The meal begun so auspiciously, had ended with my husband in a mood I didn't understand at all, and I thought I'd become used to all varieties during my life with him.

His words, "I'm not quite the blind bat you think me," echoed in my ears, but it wasn't so much the words as the glance that accompanied them, which puzzled and terrified me.

For if ever I saw suspicion, ugly and cold, I saw it in my husband's eyes as he pushed back his chair and rose from the table.

I had seen Dicky fiercely jealous and wildly angry before, I knew the absolute unreason of him when he was in a rage, but there was a new element in the feeling I read, or fancied I read in his eyes, a sinister coldness which I never before had experienced.

I cast about swiftly in my mind for the reason. His discovery of my lurching "a deax" with Harry Underwood at the Eileen Co. Ltd. tea room, would ordinarily have been explanation enough of his present anger as well as of his moroseness and coldness since that memorable day. But contrary to his usual explosive habit of threshing out any question that displeases him, he hadn't referred to that meeting by word nor look since.

I had explained his silence to myself by two suppositions—first, that Harry Underwood's adroit manner of carrying off the situation had convinced Dicky that our rendezvous was an accidental one; second, by the fact that his own presence at the tea room, accompanied by Edith Fairfax, had left him with no excuse for anger against me.

"Aren't You Afraid?"

No, I decided, there must be some other reason for Dicky's suspicious anger than the tea room contretemps. A little cold shiver ran down my spine as I contemplated the possibility of his having learned of the midnight expedition to Long Island I had taken for the secret service. I couldn't explain to Dicky why I had gone—my promise to Lillian forbade me—but if he had learned of my companion upon that trip was Allen Drake, I didn't wonder at his attitude.

I leaned my head upon my hands in sudden despair, for there was but one way in which Dicky could have found out anything about that trip. The image of Grace Draper, mocking, devilish, rose before me. I knew that her malignant enmity to me never slumbered. If she could have managed to convey her knowledge to Dicky, she would most assuredly have done so.

Katie came out softly, ostensibly to clear the table. As she bent over the dishes, she muttered in a low voice:

"Look out vunce, Missis Graham. Dot old cat vomans, she coon't down stairs. You not vant her see you like dot?"

I blessed Katie's shrewd thoughtfulness as I raised my head. I couldn't hear Cousin Agatha's footsteps—she creeps around the house as noiselessly as a cat—but the almost psychic antipathy I bear her told me she was at the threshold of the veranda before she spoke.

"Aren't you afraid you will take cold, Margaret?" she purred, and the unusual, honeyed accents of her tones warned me that there was some purpose in her seeking me.

"Oh, no, indeed!" I returned, making my own voice carelessly cheerful. "It's altogether too warm an evening to take cold."

"Richard evidently doesn't think so," she said.

"The Wisest People."

"Dicky has gone up to see his mother," I returned. "As you know, that's a visit he never omits making."

"Yes, I know," she returned in her flat, monotonous tones. "Richard is a very attentive son. His mother will miss him sorely."

I stiffened with amazement, but luckily made no sound expressing astonishment. I was glad that the darkness hid my face. But I knew that the malicious old woman was waiting like a ghoul for some answer from me.

"Yes, indeed," I answered with emphasis.

I heard her give a little gasp. "Then you know?" she said.

"I know many things," I returned enigmatically. "What seems to be especially on your mind, Cousin Agatha? Can I help you in any way?"

"No, thank you!" She bit off the words as though she were viciously snapping a thread. "But I would advise you to come in out of that damp air. You're a very wise woman, Margaret, of course, but I don't think wisdom will die with you. And the wisest people slip up sometimes."

She flounced away, and an involuntary smile crossed my lips as I realized that I had effectually thwarted the malicious little surprise which she had purposed to spring upon me. Then the smile was wiped from my lips as I digested the real meaning of her words.

She must have been eavesdropping—Dicky never would have taken her into his confidence—but the purport of her words terrified me. Dicky must be going away!

MISS BESSIE LEE WILL ADDRESS PROGRESS CLUB

Miss Bessie Lee, supervisor of the Visiting Housekeepers' association of Detroit, who is to address the general meeting of the Progress club Saturday afternoon, will tell of the work done by the association in Detroit, where a house is maintained by them to demonstrate in a practical way the things which the association teaches.

Practical instruction in housekeeping under conditions that may be attained in the humblest of homes, under capable management, is a phase of the work conducted at the housekeeping center maintained by the association. Much attention is given to budget making and to the proper care of children.

The lecture Saturday will be given at 3 o'clock preceded by a business meeting at 2:15 o'clock. Slides will be used to illustrate Miss Lee's talk.
