BY TELEGRAPH. The Millon-Beecher Trial.

BROOKLYN, Feb. 23.—The splendid weather attracted a great crowd to-day to witness the proceedings in the great scandal trial. Beecher and a number of his friends arrived early. Mrs. Tilton was also present. Mrs. Moulton resumed the witness stand, and the crossexamination by Evarts commenced at 11

Witness stated she did not remember whether she ever made a fourth visit to Mrs. Woodbull. She always went there in a carriage. Never went to her bouse in connection with the evidence in this

Regarding the interview with Mrs. Til-ton in which the latter confessed to her adultery with Mr. Beecher, witness said she did not remember having told any-body but Mr. Moulton about it. Witness relating the interview when she called Tilton a villain, said the conversation was at her house, in August of last year, while Moulton was preparing his state-

Tilton told Frank he had broken faith with him in giving any statement to pub-lish. Witness overheard the remark, and became angry at Tilton's tone, and spoke sharply to him. Might have called him a villain. Witness did not remember any conversation she had with Mrs. Charles Denis at Newport, in which she said Beecher was an innocent man. The cross-examination then closed, and Fullerton asked witness to explain how

The cross-examination then closed, and Fullerton asked witness to explain how she came to kiss Mr. Beecher on the forehead, and on another cocasion why she placed her hands on his shoulders? She said she was convinced on the evening Mr. Beecher threatened suicide that she would never see him again. He was much depressed and broke down. She kissed him in sympathy.

On another occasion Moulton was present. She placed her hands on Mr. Beecher's shoulders and said, "Frank, take care of this good man." She advised her husband to give a short statement to the church committee, because she wanted to give Beecher another chance. She said to Moulton, "Give the old man a chance."

old man a chance."

This remark caused roars of laughter.

Evarts then called Kate Carey in continnation of her cross-examination. At almost the same moment Beach said, "We rest our case." The sudden cessation of the plaintiff's case astonished both law-the plaintiff's case astonished both law-yers and spectators. Miss Carey was then examined by Evarts.

In answer to Evart's question, she said she didn't know when she was mar-ried. Her husband's name was John Bmith. [Laughter.] She was asked re-garding her residence with a number of families, and she acknowledged that she had been discharged from several for been discharged from several for drunkenness.

She was asked if she had told John A.

Story, in Bellevue Hospital, that she never saw any thing wrong between Beecher and Mrs. Tilton, but she could come down and say so any way, and that she could get a good place.

She replied that she never told him anything of the kind. After further exmination regarding her modes of life, the examination closed.
