The Britis in China.
The latest intelligence from China represents that distracted country as daily making nearer approaches to a state of discolution and complete anarchy, and also average lift of 81 feet, which would give it that the operations of the British in that quester of the world aim at the possession of a series of deep pools, and, as is assumed, would afford a safe and easy navigation for the largest steamers and heaviest barges. the celestial empire. This would lead to It is proposed to raise dams 11 or 12 feet the enactment of a drama somewhat similar to that which has been performed by he English in India, and we doubt not with an equally beneficial result; for, we think the necessity for excavations below the that no one acquainted with the past and present condition of Hindoostan and British India generally, will deny that it has been very much benefited by the rule of the Anon of the Chinese would be immeasurably worse than it will be if they are placed under the same kind of tutelage by which the Hindoos have profited. We ave no fear that by this operation England would receive any dangerous accessions of power. Taking the ability to wage war as he test of a nation's strength, we doubt if England's relations with India have added to her effective or available force. If they have, the result has been brought about by the indirect influence of commercial tranne, which by enriching the English cole have enabled them to pay the taxes manded by war. But the introduction of better form of government among the

The United States would profit equally with England by any revolution that would open China to the civilizing influences of an unebackled commerce, and from our position on the Pacific coast we perhaps have even now the start of the English in our ations with the celestials. Viewed, then, from the stand point of commercial advantages, we think that the contemplated removation of Chinese affairs would produce profitable consequences to the peole of all trading countries; and if we take a bigher and more disinterested view of the subject, we are confident that it would be immensely beneficial to the Chinese themselves.

The St. Louis Intelligencer noticing an orgues the improbability of the construction of the Pacific Railroad, says the Post neglects to consider that with a railroad the journey from the Mississippi to the Pacific would require only five or six days—a circumstance of itself sufficient to insure for the road the whole passenger business, no matter what the price of passage might be. Besides, the road, if constructed, would create business, Winkle, are said to have netted $20,000 as all roads do, and though there may not each. be enough of trade and travel now, between the States and the Pacific coast, to make the road a paying one, there would be after the road had been built.

The New York Board of Aldermen have reported in favor of Latting's proposition to erect a monument to Washington on the structed with iron, and to be finished in ready been bought for the purpose.

A project has been broached in Pittsburgh for converting the Obio river into a canal, for converting the Unio river into a canal, and a proposition for that purpose submitted to the Pittsburgh Board of Trade has been unanimously approved by that body and commended to the favorable consideration of the public. The plan is to convert the entire river into slack water by means of about 50 locks at unequal distances, of an ter of the pools to rise two or three feet immediately above the dams, thus obvisting locks, and giving, at the lowest stage of water, not less than five feet at the upper ends of the pools. A great many things apparently demon strate themselves on paper, which are far from being proved by practice. Any one who has ever seen the Ohio river pouring down with the tremendous power of a spring freshet would be inclined to doubt the feasibility of converting it into a slack water canal, or curling its mighty force by any combinations of locks and dams. Some years ago an enterprising genius proposed a plan for establishing in the upper country reservoirs of extraordinary size, from which to feed the river during the summer and autumnal droughts. That experiment was never made, and we doubt if the present project will approach any nearer a completion. The Pittsburgh Board of Trade, however, appears to entertain a different idea, and from the statement which has been published under its auspices, we quote the subjoined paragraphs relative to the cost and advantages of the proposed improvement:

"The estimated cost of the work is from seven to ten million of dollars for the whole work, which is supposed to be about half the expense of an ordinary canal, or about one-third the average cost of a railroad. It is calculated that the business will be so great that the tolls need not be one-tenth as much as those assessed upon the tonnage of ordinary canals, and yet the Accoraac, with their little browns round their Accoraac, with their little brightness and there like a meteor; Yankee schoolmasters executed in Accoraac, with their little brightness and there like a meteor; Yankee schoolmasters executed in Accoraac, with their little brightness and there like a meteor; Yankee schoolmasters executed in Accoraac, with their little brightness and the must be two thousand. The advantages of the proposed improvements are: that it would render the Ohio River permanently navigable, so that its immense and growing commerce would not be subjected to those periodical interruptions to which it is now liable; and would considerably economize propelling power, enabling freights to be transported much cheaper than atpresent, because, owing to the gentleness of the current, tow-boats could carry almost any number of barges or canal-boats either up or down."
