THE President's message is about as lengthy as it is long-winded, and, in all, is rather an uninteresting document. A certain degree of uncertainity prevails throughout, which is attributed perhaps to the tidal wave of the popular vote on November 7th, last. .

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4, 1893. The more the subject is talked over among those interested in the matter the stronger become the indications that there will be little or no financial legislation at the session of Congress which begins next monday. A number of measures will be reported from committees soon after the session .st to opens, but there is such a conflict of opinion and of interest in the matter that the accomplishment of anything definite is extremely doubtful. On the part of the silver men there is hardly a disposition to make any effort.
