Why We Are Thirsty. The sensation of thirst is caused by a lack of fluids in the system. In a state of health it indicates that the body wants moisture. We should distinguish natural thirst from that caused by stimulating food and beverages, which produce a fever in the organs of digestion. Thirst is caused by a failure of the salivary and other glands to secrete a proper amount of fluid for use in the stomach. It is possible to quench thirst not only by the ordinary means, but through the blood vessels and the skin. Much of the water drunk passes out through the skin by means of the blood vessels and is known as unconscious perspiration. It is a well known fact that the loss of blood is always followed by intense thirst. This thirst is one of the most harrowing features of a battlefield, as every old soldier knows. The reason for it is that the blood vessels being drained of their moisture, the skin becomes parched and every pore is changed into a thirsty mouth. Thirst accompanies fevers, but its causes are local, being due to dryness in the throat and mouth, the result of a high temperature.

A Quaint Old Ceremony. This is one of many quaint ceremonies that take place at the Church of St. Gildas, in Brittany, on the feast day of the patron saint. Two or three thousand peasants on horseback ride in procession three times round the church and then proceed to draw water from the sacred well close by and pour it over their animals in the belief that it will act as a sure preventive of accidents and disease.

Meanwhile the women inside the church are engaged in standing in a stone sarcophagus supposed to have contained the body of the saint. This is looked upon as a certain cure for toothache. But the most important of all the ceremonies is the throwing of a fowl from the tower of the church to the people below. It is torn to pieces in an instant, and the man who is fortunate enough to secure the head is looked upon as a champion, while his parish is regarded as sure to secure the best harvest.

Cynical Swift. Swift's sardonic saying that a man who marries "throws his hand into a sackful of snakes on the chance of finding an eel" is often quoted as the Arabian proverb and sometimes attributed to a later misologist, but hardly ever assigned to its real author. Every one, however, recognizes as Swiftian the following sayings expressive of the unhappiness of marriage and of the cause of this unhappiness: "Venus, a beautiful, good natured lady, was the goddess of love; Juno, a terrible shrew, the goddess of marriage—and they were always mortal enemies." "The reason why so few marriages are happy is because young ladies spend their time in making nets, not in making cages."—T. P.'s London Weekly.
