QUIETLY SOLEMNIZED.

FOR DEFENSE

We have seen the children lying Huddled-wounded-dead-We shall hear their far, faint crying Till earth's last word is said; Bleeding and shattered, flung aside, Lieut, William A. Rawls, son of Col-Charred in the homestead's fire, Struck with the sword, whelmed in the tide,

For a people's blood-desire! Then will you say again "This is a war of kings"? Nay, but this is a war of men Defending precious things-

We have heard a fearful humming Sounding from shore to shore-The vulture airships coming
Away from the line of war,
Away, on a cold and shameful quest,

To cottage roof and bed; And the clinging child at its mother's breast,

Sprayed with her blood, lies dead. Yet will you say again "This is a war of kings"? This is a war of outraged men Fighting for helpless things.

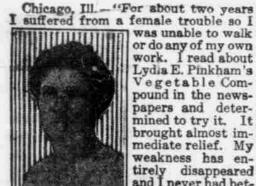

When old and young are falling Under the dastard darts, When Freedom's self is calling To all unfettered hearts, When all that men have lived and blue and gray hat.

To bring to light and bloom Rides the crest of a threatening tide, Rocks on the verge of doom-Will you raise the unthinking cry again. "This is a war of kings"?

But this is a war of men-of Men-Dying for priceless things! -Marion Couthcuy Smith of the Vigilantes.

Miss Bunnell took her color scheme from the stars and stripes. The red-and-white material went into fitted bodice and a flowing skirt while the blue and white was used for a coat lining. A black hat of stunning curves and a swagger sash of black velvet served to emphasize the brilliance of the national colors as a fashion motif.
