age gang killings in our larger cities but apparently we have come to accept killings on our highways as something that is going to happen anyway.

"Until Mississippi people come to regard a traffic violator as a potential killer and unacceptable in our society, these needless killings will continue," Commissioner Scarbrough said.

The Mississippi Highway Patrol, he continued, is not going to see human life sacrificed from lack of traffic law enforcement.

"We need every citizen's support in helping us to reach this goal of fewer traffic deaths. Mississippi can close out 1959 with a reduced traffic death rate," he added.

Margin Of Traffic Accidents Is Reduced In Mississippi

Commissioner of Public Safety Tom Scarbrough states that Mississippi's margin of increase in traffic fatalities has been sharply reduced in recent weeks. On March 15, the state's toll was 41 above the corresponding period's toll the previous year. As of September 22, this margin of traffic death increase has been reduced to only 6 ahead of last year.

The Highway Patrol head attributes this reduction to stepped up traffic law enforcement begun March 1, plus the all night operation of radar. However, he warned that unless the people give his department full cooperation, there will be approximately 200 persons killed on Mississippi streets and highways during the remainder of the year.

"The Mississippi Highway Patrol is going to double its enforcement in an all out effort to prevent these 200 people from being killed. We are appalled by reports of teen-

Recommendations made at State Council for club program for 1960 were presented.

Mrs. Clifton Hughes of the Acona Club led the recreational program with an interesting contest on towns in Mississippi. The highest score was made by Mrs. W. E. Moore of the Lexington Club.
