

STOP THE ADVERTISING SIGNS.

Farmers Should Forbid the Practice Which Defaces Scenery and Damages Timber.

Messrs. Editors: Would it not be a good idea for farmers to stop allowing promiscuous signs to be nailed to trees on their private property without some consideration? I recently had some wood cut and left a nice saw stock standing. Its prominence led a Jew to nail his "cloding" sign, 15 feet high. He didn't know or care whose sawstock he was ruining. I began noticing then for trees which would ruin a saw or axe to cut them, and the result was amazing. One pine tree I noticed at the forks of the road would square 24 inches and by its location should have been worth as it stood $12 or $15, but it was literally perforated with such as this: "Schlitz Beer," "Go to Jones for Hardware," etc. The owner of that tree is out at least $12 or $15.

I think farmers should wake up and demand redress for such depredations and trespassing. It seems a great many farmers think that advertisers have free rights to advertise on their property without molestation, and quietly submit without considering the cost to themselves.
