An empire wall paper of pale apple green, figured in pink and violet, was selected, and for coats of paint and a topmost varnish were required to completely destroy all traces of the old paint.

The painting finished, she set about her task of furnishing. For the floor she purchased a cream matting with green figures and a cheap but pretty rug.

Then she purchased a neat lit-le white enameled bed with gilt trimmings. Fortunately, this fitted into a little recess in the room, so across this spot a brane rod was fixed and then supplied with a curtain of cream colored cretonne, figured in pink and violet flowers and green leaves. When drawn, the curtain completely concealed the bed from view.
