That there is an urgent necessity for better country highways is shown in the statement of a competent authority that $600,000,000 are annually wasted in this country because of the miserable condi-

The history of the bicycle reads like a fairy tale. Ten thousand years hence the plainest statement of the facts of its origin, development, uses it serves, and the place it occupies in our civilization will be regarded by the scholars of that time as we of today regard Plato's story of Atlantis or the fable of Deucalion. That men and women could sit balanced on a wheel of wire, braced and corded ake a spider's circular miracle which it fashions in the witching hours of night, and on it sitting, outrun the horse, outspeed the aog and go flying down wooded lanes with the flight of a bird, will be reckoned as a myth that haunts the imagination and laughs at the guessing of the wise. What, for improbability, can equal this strange and weird creation of man's inventiveness? Or what so elusively mock human belief when once it has passed into oblivion and losing all record as a fact has become merely a vague tradition?

And if amid the ruins of some old library a fragment of a manuscript should be discovered which told how it was used by rich and poor alike, how it was adopted into armies, added to the splendor of great public pageants, obliterated castes so that princes and peasants rode side by side in public parks, contributing to popular health and happiness beyond any other single invention of the world, what wonder and astenishment that old-time long buried document would cause among the then existing peoples on the earth. The bicycle may pass, but it will pass only when the cycle of human development which produced it has run its full course and the people that made it marvellous in human annals have passed L. A. W. Good Roads Train vice or pleasure, or the result of human lar needs the bicycle stands today as the consummate achievement of our mechanical development.

Albert Gans (140 points), William Gerthe opening matches of the amateur handicap billiard tournament. The con tests were played in Maurice Daly's Academy and furnished excellent sport. The best game of the day was that in which Gershel, the scratch man, defeated W. S. Bash, who was placed on the 150 point mark. Gershel proved his skill by negotiating his string with an average equal to many of the Class A play ers. He made eight double figure runs and played brilliant billiards. There was but little nursing in his work, as Bash kept the balls spread. This forced Gershel to round-the-table shots. In the eighteenth inning he pushed up a cluster eighteenth inning he pushed up a cluster of 34 buttons. It was dazzilng cue wielding from start to finish, the last point being scored by a combination kiss that missed. But the cue ball chased down the centre of the table and caught the red ball on the fly. He then fell down on a difficult spread draw shot. Gershel finished his string of 200 points, leaving Bash with only I buttons.

Three games will be played today. Bash meets Tobias at 4 o'clock this afternoon, and Gershel meets Bennett, and Gans crosses cues with Roeder in the evening.
