NEW BUILDING NEEDED.

Present Government Printing Office at Washington is reported to be so inconveniently located that it is said to have cost the government printing bureau $1,000 per month for rental, and many government officials have long been urging the building of a new Government Printing Office. The occasion offered by the opening of the new Government Printing Office in Washington is now a good time to act on this long-felt need of the government.

PRINTER'S DRIVER'S LICENSE.

The printer's driver's license is a document that was issued to printers who worked in the printing industry. It was a form of identification that was required by law and served as proof of employment. The license would typically include information such as the name of the printer, the address of the printing establishment, and the type of work being performed. It was a way to regulate and control the printing industry and ensure that printers were properly licensed and regulated. The driver's license was an important document for printers, as it helped to establish their credentials and was often required for employment in the printing industry. It also served as a means of identification for the government, who could use it to track printers and ensure that they were paying their taxes and other fees. Overall, the printer's driver's license was an important tool for regulating the printing industry and ensuring that printers were properly licensed and regulated.