Armless, He Makes Limbs for Others

HIS RIGHT ARM WAS GIVEN by Robert A. Daish as his contribution to a world in which men could live as they wished, but that was not enough—he now makes artificial limbs for those who also gave that which no money can replace. Above he shows to the mayor of one of London's boroughs the skill he has acquired with a file. The British veteran, injured at Tobruk, Africa, in 1942, is one of 75 war-disabled men and women demonstrating, at the "And So To Work" exhibition in the British capital, the jobs they are now doing in 28 branches of industry. Not all of them received their wounds on foreign battlefields; some were struck when the blitz brought war into millions of British homes.
