COLONEL JOHN HAY.

The Republican hands in this campaign that attempt to defile the private character of Gen. Hancock would do well to settle themselves.

Gen. W. Scott Hancock. "A full voter's free ballot, and a fair count."

"Public office is a trust, not a bounty bestowed upon the holder. No incompetent or dishonest person should ever be entrusted with it."

"If elected to the Presidency I should deem it my duty to resist with all my power any attempt to impair or evade the full force and effect of the constitution, which in every article, section and amendment, is the supreme law of the land."

"The right of trial by jury, the habeas corpus, the liberty of the press, the freedom of speech, the natural rights of persons, and the rights of property must be preserved."

GOLDEN WORDS.

GENERAL W. T. SHERMAN. "Write down the very best things you can think of say of Gen. Hancock as an officer and a gentleman and I will sign it."

GENERAL U. S. GRANT. "I have known him for forty years. His personal, official and military record is good."

JAMES A. GARFIELD. "The man who attempts to get up a political excitement in this country on the old sectional issues will find himself without a party and without support."

HON. ROBERT HILL. "Gentlemen: The principles of the Democratic party are as far above the principles of the Republican party as the battlements of high heaven are above the mounds of hell."

HON. CARL SCHUEZ. "I shall certainly not attempt to depreciate the character of Gen. Hancock, and the great service which he has rendered to the country. He is a gentleman of irreproachable character, which I shall be sorry to see any effort made to diminish. As a soldier, he has shown himself and still in handling troops under difficult circumstances, and his name is identified with some of the most splendid achievements of the war. For all this every good citizen will honor him."

THE BULLDOZER'S SHOT-GUN AND SLAIN WITHOUT CEREMONY OR REMORSE.

Now the sable Cicero offers himself a living sacrifice on the martyr's altar. Cannot some good friend dissuade the noble Douglass from this rash, inopportune act. His life, now mellowed by the declining years should not be thus cast away.

The fifth festival of the Cincinnati Musical Festival association will be held in Cincinnati in May, 1882, and in pursuance of the policy adopted by it in connection with its last festival, the association offers a prize of one thousand dollars for the most meritorious composition for chorus and orchestra, to be performed on that occasion. Competition shall be open to all citizens of the United States, irrespective of place of birth.

A PLUCKY Kentucky school ma'am is Miss Hillbreth, of Hopkins county. She attempted to punish a boy named Merrill for some misdemeanor, when the youth drew his knife. Miss Hillbreth unarmed him, and he brought a club to his assistance, but she finally whipped him. That night the boy's father went to Miss Merrill's boarding-house and cursed her shamefully. The next day he went to the school-house to continue his abuse, but the young lady had armed herself with a pistol and dared Merrill to enter the door. Merrill ran home, and was returning with a shot-gun, when he was arrested by an officer, but soon escaped, and is now at large.

GRANT ON HANCOCK. The late interview in which Gen. Grant speaks so roughly of Gen. Hancock proverbs extended comment of the press. It is not forgotten that Hancock was the officer whom Grant especially trusted in his great movement on Richmond, in 1864, nor that Grant has spoken in very high terms of that officer, and these facts are brought out now by the independent press.

The New York Herald says: The person who gave to the public the report of Grant's conversation concerning Gen. Hancock certainly did him no service, but a great injury. It will not raise Gen. Grant in the estimation even of republicans to see him descending to the abuse of a fellow-soldier, whose gallantry and devotion to the union he has on previous occasions freely acknowledged. To say now, in the heat and excitement of a political canvass, that the democratic candidate is vain, that he is ambitious of the presidency, that his is a pretty character, only brings to everybody's recollection that in his cooler moments, and before he was moved by what will be generally esteemed partisan rancor, Gen. Grant says: "There are men in that organization (the democratic party), met like Bayard, McClellan, Hancock and others whom I know. They are as loyal and patriotic as any men. Bayard, for instance, would make a splendid president. I would not be afraid of the others in that office." Recalling this language we may pass over what the general now says of his fellow-soldier as an ebullition of partisan spleen, which, as it is unworthy of him, the public ought to overlook and forget. It has no weight, nor any importance, except it rouses a regret in generous minds to see so eminent a man so forget himself.

The Philadelphia Times says: A month after the nomination of General Garfield, and when Grant was sulking away in the mountains, an interview with him by L. G. Entright, an old Pacific friend of his, was reported in detail in the public journals, and never contradicted by Grant. In that interview he spoke freely of Gen. Hancock, saying, that in his opinion, "No better or safer man could be elected to the chief magistracy." Three days ago, another interview was given in the party organs from Grant, as reported by Rev. Dr. Fowler, a prominent Methodist minister. The interview was so grossly vituperative, of both Hancock and the south, that it shocked even the friends of Garfield, and Grant hastened to modify the statements of his ministerial interviewer; but, after all the explanations that Grant made, he stands on record as falsifying himself about Gen. Hancock. When did Gen. Grant speak the truth about Gen. Hancock? Was he truthful when he declared, after Hancock's nomination, that "No better or safer man could be elected to the chief magistracy," or was he truthful when he declared Hancock to be "crazy to be president," and "ambitious, vain and weak?" In one of these statements, like his directly conflicting statements respecting the south. Gen. Grant told what he believed to be the truth, and in the other he could not have done so. It will be remarked that when he ridiculed the south and commended Hancock one of the best and safest men for the presidency, he was not prompted by politicians, but spoke voluntarily and for himself; and that when he condemned the south and Hancock he spoke immediately after conference with Garfield, Conkling, Cameron and Logan, who had gathered in Ohio to save Garfield's own republican state to the party. Very many men of all parties will profoundly regret that Gen. Grant has been so strangely forgetful of the integrity of his public opinions, and henceforth he will rank only with the desperate politicians who deluded him to defeat at Chicago, and whose friendship must be fatal to all his hopes of political success in the future. He has effaced all the little gilding that was left on the third-term banner, and that is an achievement for the country, but it is at a fearful cost of once freely proffered homage to our great citizen and soldier.

One of the easiest things to catch, and at the same time one of the most difficult to get rid of, is a cough or cold. Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, however, always proves equal to the emergency. Price 25 cents.
