MEN WOMEN AND BOOKS.

EDITED IN THE INTEREST OF THE CAIRO PUBLIC LIBRARY.

Mrs. Oliphant is writing a book on Venice.

Miss Charlotte M. Gonze is writing a series of historical ballads.

A new lease of life has been given to Mrs. Rosa Hartwick Thorpe's "Curfew shall not ring to-night," by the handsomely engraved illustrations of Merbill and Garrett.

In consequence of the unsettled state of Egypt, M. Renan has delayed his visit to Sinai and Palestine till February, 1883. He is now hard at work on his "History of Israel" and on the index of his "Origines du Christianisme," which is partly in type.

The publication of Synols' great "History of the Renaissance in Itally," which was tentatively begun with a single part, has been so far encouraged that it is about to be completed by the publication of the last two parts—the "Italian Literature."—The earlier parts were The Fine Arts, The Ages of the Depots, and The Revival of Learning.

The second volume of Prof. Ebers' superb work on "Egypt" has been received from the publishers, and the book is now completed. Its author could ask no better monument to conserve his fame as a scholar and writer.

Baron Tauchnitz, the well known German publisher, commemorated the new year of 1882 by a memorial volume, the two thousandth of his series. It contains with few exceptions the signatures of all the American and English writers whose works are included in the Tauchnitz series.

Miss Rose Kingsley, daughter of the late Charles Kingsley, will contribute several articles to Wide Awake during the coming year.

At a meeting of friends in Chester, Penn. in commemoration of the Penn bi-centennial, the following letter and poem by Mr. Whittier was read:

DANVERS, MASS., 10, 7, 1882.

To Sarah B. Fitcraft, Chester, Penn.

MY DEAR FRIEND:—It is well that friends should commemorate the landing of the founder of Pennsylvania, and the great apostle of their faith, on the pleasant shores of Chester two hundred years ago. The event, so picturesque in its surroundings and circumstances, so important in its results and influences, is a subject worthy of the poet's pen or the painter's pencil. I should be glad if it were possible for me to put into fitting metrical form the thoughts and emotions which it awakens; but the burden of years begins to rest heavily upon me, and I shrink from the effort of handling such a theme.

In spite of the endeavor of a historian more regardful of the display of his rhetoric and sarcasm than of historicol accuracy and justice, the memory of William Penn is secure in its grand outlines and unsulled purity. He stands, and will forever stand, with the sages, statesmen and philanthropists, of whom the world of their day was not worthy. He lived and thought centuries in advance of his contemporaries; and slowly but surely, the generations since have been approaching the moral and political standard which he set up on the shores of the Delaware.

Looking over some old papers recently, I found some verses written by me when a boy of sixteen, nearly six years ago. Of course the circumstances under which they were penned alone entitle them to notice, but I ventured to send them as the only response to thy request which I can make. I am truly thy friend.

JOHN G. WHITTIER.

WILLIAM PENN.

The tyrant on his gilded throne,
The warrior in his battle-dress,
The holier triumph ne'er have known
Of justice and of righteousness.

Founder of Pennsylvania! Thou
Didst feel it, when thy words of peace
Smoothed the stern chieftain's swarthy brow,
And bade the dreadful war-dance cease.

On Schuylkill's banks no fortess frowned,
The peaceful cot alone was there;
No beacon fires the hill tops crowned,
No death-shot swept the Delaware.

In manners meek, in precepts mild,
Thou and thy friends serenely taught
The savage huntsman, fierce and wild,
To raise to Heaven his erring thought.

How all unlike the bloody band
That unrelenting Cortez led
To princely Montezuma's land,
And ruin 'round his pathway shed.

With hearts that knew not how to spare,
Disdaining milder means to try—
The crimson sword alone was there,
The Indian's choice to yield or die.

But thou, meek Pennsylvanian sire,
Unarmed, alone, from terror free,
Taught by the heathen council fire
The lessons of Christianity.

Founder of Pennsylvania's state—
Not on the blood-wet rolls of fame,
But with the wise, the good, the great,
The world shall place thy sainted name.

1824.

CACHE LETTER.

Dear Bulletin:

Do you ask the cause of my long silence? Well, I have been getting cultivated; and during the time could not afford one moment for epistolary pleasure.

This is how it was: During a visit to my sister-in-law, in Vienna, (that is in Johnson county) I discovered that I was clear out of the world. Not behind the times, understand; on the contrary, they were behind me. In dress and furniture everybody was going backward at a startling rate of velocity, leaving me standing stock still. Not exactly, either. My momentum, not affected by the inertia of the retrograding world, had been sufficient to keep me going on till I encountered an external force—the thing that, once in a while, looms up before the perpetual motion man.

When this force, i. e., my discovery, had fully acted upon me, my motion ceased, as a matter of course. Thanks to the suggestions of unselfish friends, dealers' catalogues, art journals, etc., I soon was moving again, but in the opposite direction; and have fully caught up—fallen back, rather, with the other cults. Nowadays the very newest things are the oldest. This may seem strange to the uninitiated. But those of us who are imbued with an appreciation of the beautifully pure in art, realize that the ancients were more perceptively metaphysical than we; we are, therefore, quite willing to forget our own psychomachy while humbly imitating them in a feeble way.

My house is now equal in artistic effects to any I saw while in Vienna; it is chastely classic enough to please the oldest Ancient. The only thing to mar my ineffable satisfiedness when I gaze upon the poetry of furniture about me, is the memory of the time when, in uncultivated modernness, I deemed it a delight to select such things according to my own fancy.

Think of the difference between now and then. All I had to do this summer was to send a description of my rooms, with a request for advice on fall housecleaning to "the æsthetic housefurnishing decorative artists, Atelier," Broadway, N. Y., and await directions It was impossible to convince that stubborn clod of a Darius that embroidered portieres are a necessity, so those horrid wooden doors—stiff, ungraceful things!—must be endured a little longer. But I followed as nearly as I could the artists' helped guidance in the front room, at least, feeling that they knew exactly what I ought to get.

The ceiling is blue, with olive-green walls, the two colors so beautifully blended by a separating band of terra-cotta, relieved by black and gold beetles and lizards classically pursuing each other. The curtains are greenish blue, suggestive of sky and grass, with a spider's web, its busy weaver and his prey, all outlined with charming fidelity to life. Darius says that it looks like I was a trifling woman, to have the windows all strung over with cobwebs. When I go into the room in a hurry, without thinking, it strikes me so too; but I don't let him know it!

A table cover of a dull rose pink with a single sunflower outlined in the centre, the petals falling about in a careless abandon, is a reminder both in tint and design of the retreating summer and Oscar. Its hues melt with a delicious readiness into the carpet of old gold strewn with purple thistles. Harmonizing as both do with ceilings, walls and curtains, the music of the room, the song of colors, so to speak, were yet an unfinished melody, but for the fire-screen.

That is the key-note of the whole! Imagine a blue field, like an Egyptian sky, not marred by anything save one solitary pea-fowl feather, bent and lying obliquely across it as though it was just plucked from the glorious bird. It is so sweetly, so sadly, alone! It makes me think of Cleopatra's Needle, the majestic Sphinx, Thothms, and the poor little dead wasp that was found in the mummy's coffin. My eyes suffuse. I cannot linger, even to describe my new grass-boquet whose severe elegance comprises two stalks of cats-tail and one of wild oats, raising their slender height from an ancient earthen receptacle, upon which is etched the foot of a wild goose.

Only one foot, and yet so suggestive! Those few chaste storkes give me food for thought for days at a time; rich nourishment it is for the mind to complete the picture. Here a stroke, there a touch, and lo! the entire bird. Methinks I hear it's "honk, honk!" Rested, I return with renewed zest to domestic tasks made light by such soulful, satisfying refreshment.

The foregoing has not been thrown off as a hint that you are painfully modern in your town. Not by any means. You, too, have gone back; clear back, anterior to the time of the money changers spoken of by sacred writers. When you throw open your "houses of prayer" to traveling advertising mediums whose songs overshadow and make secondary the exhortations of the expounders of Holy Writ, are you not in a fair way to advance still further in the footsteps of those whose tables were thrown over and whose seats were taken from them after that memorable entry into Jerusalem one day so long ago? Or is it that you are so harmless as doves, and as thoughtless, while the Knights of Wizard Oil, wise as serpents, used their talents as an entering wedge for a position in the church portico, where the devout may purchase their unctuous wares? It really is a quite genteel method of advertising, and one which the proprietor of the Theatre Comique will probably not be slow in taking up.

Yesterday morning we saw the first frost of the season. It may be that thick cornshucks mean a cold winter, but we can more easily believe that the thick spider webs of a few weeks since meant a long warm autumn. If this weather should last much longer your Florida-bound citizens would be loathe to leave you, even for the delights of fruit growing without the curculio.

MRS. D. GREEN.

ROAD LAWS.

Bloomington Bulletin.

Hon. A. N. J. Crook, mayor of Springfield has issued a circular to the several mayors of the cities of Illinois asking for a conference with them on the subject of roads. He believes that his fellow mayors recognize the fact that the commercial, manufacturing handicraft and laboring interests centered in the cities of Illinois are inseparably connected with and largely dependent upon the agricultural districts surrounding the same; that the state is now free from debt; that our people are prosperous; and that attention should at once be directed towards possible permanent

The generally assembly will convene again next January. The propriety of organizing general interest upon this subject of permanent state roads by concurrent action on the part of several city governments is suguested to me by many representative citizens. There is no doubt but such a conference held in this city Thursday, December 7th, would result in formulating such a road law as would not only receive the indorsement of the general assembly, but secure permanent state roads, as well as prove of economic advantage to tax-payers.

The suggested conference should be held.

There is no question that should be of more interest to the people of Illinois than the road question, and no time should be lost in adopting some system by which passable permanent state roads may be made in every part of Illinois.

Should the state undertake this work? Certainly. Why not? But how can the state do the proposed work? That is a matter of detail, and the conference of mayors may be able to determine it in a satisfactory manner. One thing might and should be done. The convicts in our penitentiaries should be taken from all the trades at which they are now working in competition with the mechanics of our state, and be put at the work of stone-breaking. The macadam thus made should be furnished to the several counties of the state under rules prescribed by law and be used in road building. And more than this. All the men confined in our jails for petty crimes should be made stone-breakers, and the material thus provided should be used in the construction of roads.

But whatever is done must be done in pursuance of a system, and before any system of road construction is decided upon it should be carefully considered from every possible standpoint of objection.

CAIRO . . . . ILLS.

Oh, My Back!

That's a common expression and has a world of meaning. How much suffering is summed up in it.

The singular thing about it is, that pain in the back is occasioned by so many things. May be caused by kidney disease, liver complaint, consumption, cold, rheumatism, dyspepsia, overwork, nervous debility, &c.

Whatever the cause, don't neglect it. Something is wrong and needs prompt attention. No medicine has yet been discovered that will so quickly and surely cure such diseases as BROWN'S IRON BITTERS, and it does this by commencing at the foundation, and making the blood pure and rich.

Logansport, Ind. Dec. 1, 1880.

For a long time I have been a sufferer from stomach and kidney disease. My appetite was very poor and the very small amount I did eat disagreed with me. I was annoyed very much from non-retention of urine. I tried many remedies with no success, until I used Brown's Iron Bitters. Since I used that my stomach does not bother me any. My appetite is simply immense. My kidney trouble is no more, and my general health is such, that I feel like a new man. After the use of Brown's Iron Bitters for one month, I have gained twenty pounds in weight. O. B. SARGENT.

Leading physicians and clergymen use and recommend BROWN'S IRON BITTERS. It has cured others suffering as you are, and it will cure you.
