Subduing Chinamen. The Southern Pacific Construction Company contracted for their laborers in California at a fixed price per head and was under bond to return them to the agent of the six Companies when the road was completed.

It was not long before he learned that one hundred cents for twelve hours of hard work was not the usual price paid railroad laborers. He began to desert, and the country between El Paso and the Pecos River was soon full of eastward moving pigtails.

In this emergency a man arose—they always do under such circumstances—who boldly proclaimed his ability to nip this Chinese rebellion in the bud. The company granted him extraordinary powers and he entered upon his labors.

He picked up a heavy billet of wood as he finished speaking and invited me to go along and "see the fun." I went.

He cocked the pistol, and, as though by accident, pointed the muzzle at the Chinaman's head. The wretch fell upon his knees and began to beg piteously. Martin seemed to enjoy the poor devil's misery and smiled upon him benignantly.

"What will you do with him?" I asked. "Oh, I'll carry him back up the road a couple of hundred miles and drop him. He won't come back."

There was something significant in this latter sentence, but as the speaker's teeth were gleaming I did not demand more explicit information.

When we got ready to move out the Chinaman was locked in an empty box-car. That was the last I saw of him.

CLEANINGS.

A Tennessee schoolmaster kissed the girls as a punishment, and before the trustees put a stop to the practice it took him about an hour per day to requite their disobedience.

It is said that Mr. Burnand, the editor of the Punch, has been married twice, is the father of fourteen children, and is an incessant jester.
