The Market.

MONDAY EVENING, Sept. 24, 1883.

The weather is cool and cloudy to-day. A cold wind from the southwest has prevailed all day filling the air with dust taken from the top of the six inches of loose soil that covers the streets and roads in all directions.

The drouth that afflicts this section continues unbroken and vegetation is hopelessly drying up.

The rivers are very low and rates of freight steady and firm.

FLOUR—We note a good demand for the better grades, with fair stocks and firm prices. Low grades are not wanted.

HAY—Receipts are double the quantity needed to supply the demand and warehouses are all about full. Only choice can be placed at all.

CORN—Market dull. Receipts are small, but there is no demand.

OATS—Receipts have fallen off, but there is plenty offering for the light demand.

MEAL—Very dull. Plenty offering and light sales.

BRAN—Quiet and unchanged.

BUTTER—There is an active demand for strictly choice and no arrivals. Common is plenty and dull.

EGGS—The market is bare to day and the demand active @ 18c.

CHICKENS—The market is glutted and prices weak.

APPLES—Choice varieties are in active request.

POTATOES—Dull and quiet.

Sales and Quotations.

NOTE.—The prices here given are for sales from first hands in round lots. An advance is charged for broken lots in filling orders.

Persistence of Forms of Disease.

A disease remains the same in essence no matter whom it attacks or what its severity in the individual case. Each contagious disease breeds only its own kind and no other. When we experiment with an isolated disease-producing germ, it causes always one and the same affliction, if it takes hold at all.

But evidence is beginning to accumulate that, though we cannot change one species into another, we can modify the power and activity, in short the virulence in parasites. Pasteur has shown that when the bacteria of chicken cholera are kept in an open vessel, exposed to the air for many months, their power to struggle with the animal cells is gradually enfeebled. Taken at any stage during their decline of virulence, and placed in a fresh soil in which they can grow, be it in the body of an animal or outside, they multiply as before. But the new breed has only the modified virulence of its parents and transmits the same to its progeny. Though the form of the parasite has been unaltered its physiological activity has been modified; it produces no longer the fatal form of chicken cholera, but only a slight attack from which the animal recovers.

By further enfeeblement of the parasite the disease gives to its host can be reduced in severity to almost any extent. These mild attacks, however, protect the animal from repetitions. By passing through the modified disease, the chicken obtains immunity from the fatal form. In the words of Pasteur, the parasite can be transformed into a "vacine virus," by cultivation under conditions which enfeeble its power. The splendid view is thus opened to us, of vaccinating, some day, against all diseases—in which one attack grants immunity against another. Pasteur has succeeded in the same way in another disease of much greater importance, namely, splenic fever. The parasite of this affection has also been modified by him, by special modes of cultivation, so as to produce a mild attack, protecting against the graver form of the disease. Pasteur's own accounts of his results in vaccinating against anthrax, the stock on French farms, are dazzling, but a repetition of his experiments in other countries, by his own assistants, has been less conclusive. In Hungary, the immunity obtained by vaccination was not absolute, while the protective vaccination itself destroyed some fourteen per cent. of the herds.

Yet, though much of the enthusiasm generated by Pasteur's researches may proceed further than the facts warrant, he has at least opened a new path which promises to lead to results of the highest importance to mankind.—From the "Germ Theory of Disease," in Popular Science Monthly.

Concerning Ticks.

They usually have eight legs, terminated by claws adapted for holding on, and their mouth parts are constructed for the copious sucking of blood. In their early life, the ticks live upon plants, but when occasion offers, they attach themselves to vertebrate animals of all kinds, man included. The females are covered by a skin capable of great extension, and when one of them can attach itself to an animal, it at once begins to suck blood, and grows to many times its original size. Cattle, horses, sheep, dogs, and other quadrupeds are attacked by them, as are bats and several birds. Hunters and others, who are much in the woods, are sometimes annoyed by them. Ticks are abundant in some parts of the far West and Southwest, and attack not only cattle and their drivers, but deer and other wild animals. Ticks cause great annoyance to cattle, but they soon get so large, that they are readily seen and may easily be removed. When they attack the traveler, the itching they cause is so intense that the cause is soon sought and removed. If neglected, they have sometimes caused serious tumors, which had to be opened and the annoying creature extracted.—American Agriculturist.

A wild rumor prevails that young George Vanderbilt, who is the fourth and youngest son of William H. V., has decided to become a literary man. In fact, it is said that he has a decided taste for journalism, and will begin at the foot of the ladder, as a police reporter on the New York papers. The youth is only 19 years of age and is a studious and quiet by nature. He is worth several millions in his own right, but apparently cares nothing for money. A Vanderbilt as a reporter would be a decided sensation in New York journalism.
