TOO CARELESS ABOUT

APPENDICITIS HERE

Many local people have constipation, sour stomach or gas on the stomach, which may turn into appendicitis at a minutes notice. They should at once take simple buckthorn bark and glycerine as mixed in Adler's-Ika, the new German appendicitis remedy. A SINGLE DOSE helps almost INSTANTLY and stops further danger because it seems to draw off all the old impurities from the system. Edw. Sheppard, Druggist.

Greek Queen and Four Princesses In the War

Working to Succor the Wounded and Aid Distressed Families.

Each Has a Part in the Organization That Has Been Effected.

FOUR princesses of Greece and the queen herself and with them, it may be said, all the women of Greece are bearing a large part of the burden of war. Just before war was declared on Turkey Queen Olga was absent in Russia on a visit to the czar, and the Crown Princess Sophie felt it her duty to take the initiative in getting assistance for her country by organizing women to give such aid as only women can give in time of war.

The crown princess called all the princesses of the royal house to a conference in Athens, and each of them. It is recorded, responded within the day either in person or by telegraphic or cable dispatch, saying that she was on the way. The conference was attended by Crown Princess Sophie, who is a sister of the kaiser of Germany and wife of Constantine, the crown prince of Greece; Princess Alice of Battenberg, wife of Andrew, third son of the king of Greece and niece of King George of England, and Princess Helen, wife of Nicholas, the fourth son of the king of Greece and niece of the czar of Russia.

These three princesses called the women of Athens together the day before the declaration of war, and the assembly discussed the part that patriotic women should take in the conflict. The government had been well supplied with funds to put the great army of 170,000 men on a war footing and establish a somewhat modern navy, but the women had been neglected in all the preparations for battle. Soldiers were services and much of their material resources to the needy and suffering in their country's cause.

With them, heart and hand, joined the Union of Greek Women, of which Mrs. Helen Griva, widow of General Griva, one of the national heroes, is president. The union of women of Greece has been almost coincident in development, and its purposes have been the same as the virtual union of Greek men under a different name, which has been making for war for a decade or longer as an assertion of the nation's pride and independence. This organization had defined duties, and its members understood them. It was for the betterment of the womanhood of the country and for the installation of the highest patriotism and nobility of service in the hour when the kingdom called. This was a good foundation to build upon, and to begin construction work and carry it to completion all that was needed was money. The money came fast. It has been pouring in from all over Greece and from every known part of the world since the crown princess sent out the first cry for assistance.

The response was astonishing both in promptness and generosity. The $100,000 that the Princess Marie sent by telegraph is only one instance. Crown Princess Sophie, Princess Alice and Princess Helen immediately contributed $100,000 among them. One check sent directly to the war minister the day war was declared was for $400,000, from the Greek residents of Odessa. Checks came from every part of the world.

All this has permitted the royal women and their coworkers to make a well equipped, every one with new clothes, a new pack and a new rifle. Ammunition for an indefinite campaign was in store, and the commissariat was all that could be desired. The sailors of the fleet wanted for nothing in food or raiment and were not likely to do so, but Princess Sophie discovered that, while the government was amply prepared to fight, it was not prepared at all to meet the afflictions that must inevitably follow the fighting—the care of the dead and wounded and the relief of the families of the men who fell in battle.

It was this work that the three princesses undertook to do for their country, and in it the queen united, hastily returning from Russia to take charge of it. One other princess was absent from the conference, but she was there in heart. She was the most powerful one of all, Princess Marie Bonaparte, wife of Prince George, second son of the king of Greece and now admiral of the Greek navy, having returned to his own at the outbreak of hostilities with the hated Turk. He had resigned from the navy at the time of the general military revolt a few years ago and the reorganization of both military arms of the nation and had gone with his princess to live in Paris. When the conference telegraphed to Princess Marie in Paris urging that funds were needed for the building of hospitals and the care of the sick she responded immediately with a contribution of $100,000 by telegraph and with a message saying that she was leaving Paris immediately for Athens.

None attached to the king's family could do so much for the cause as Princess Marie Bonaparte and her royal husband, whose fortune is estimated at $100,000,000, he being counted by far the richest man of Greece.

The arrival of Princess Marie in Athens made four princesses of the blood and a queen who placed their great start at the battle front and in providing for invalided soldiers who come home. The queen has been made chairman of the organization, and she is now at the frontier, where she is superintending the construction of hospitals and their equipment and providing transportation facilities for the wounded. Princess Alice is employed on the equipment of ambulance trains. Princess Helen has taken charge of the transportation of the wounded and the clothing for them. Princess Marie is devoting herself to the navy, of which her husband is the commander. The $100,000 that she gave was at her request used to equip the Greek steamer Ionila as a hospital ship for wounded sea fighters. Princess Sophie has charge of the exchequer and the administration of four large buildings that she has already rented and turned into hospitals.
