Another Census Progresses

Washington, D. C.—For the past two years the Department of the Interior has been conducting its own census of the U. S.—of wild life rather than people, with 300 enumerators traveling by plane, boat, auto and sled. Results will be published in June, but so far Uncle Sam estimates his deer at 5,800,000, his migrator waterfowl at 60,000,000 and big-game animals at 6,000,000. Only 5,000 bison are accounted for, whereas a century ago it was estimated that sixty million of these so-called "buffaloes" ranged the western plains.

By Washington State Progress Commission

Looking for historical dates occurring within April, May and June, the Washington State Progress Commission found among many others, the following:

Mount Baker was discovered and named on April 30, 1792, by Captain George Vancouver. In May of 1792 Townsend was named. Mount Rainier also was named in May, 1792 by Vancouver's expedition. Port Orchard was named on Thursday, May 29, 1792, the man who discovered the location being named Orchard.

On June 15, 1846 the international boundary was fixed between the State of Washington and Canada, the final settlement occurring in the fall of that year.

The first American home was established in the Puget Sound region at Nisqually in June, 1840 and on June 1, 1840 the largest missionary group arrived at Vancouver, Washington.
