EASTERN GIRLS MAKING HOLIDAY PLANS

WITH THE ADVENT of the first crocus come the enthusiastic plans of our Eastern school girls, for a fortnight of pleasure at their Easter holiday. Contemplated trips to the Bermudas, thru the Panama canal, thru the Cumberland on horseback, and a division of time between New York, Boston and Atlantic City, make a decision rather difficult. However, the following young ladies are quite definite as to their plans: Miss Virginia and Miss Beulah Merrill and Miss Beatrice Pease have chosen to spend their time at Virginia Hot Springs; Miss Margaret Chinn and Miss Emilie Jerome will be at the Hotel Traymore in Atlantic City; Miss Hortense Green and Miss Mildred Farrar will be at Del Monte and San Francisco; while Miss Katherine Bacon will be entertained by friends at the Charleston navy yard and in Boston.

LACE AND CHIFFON RESTAURANT GOWN

BY CORA MOORE

New York's Fashion Authority

The skirt of this restaurant gown is of fine silver lace over a chiffon drop and a chiffon tunic falls over it in four points. The bodice is just a little round affair of cream satin, fitted over a ribbon braisier, with tight shoulder sleeves and a circular neck, and then, at either side, a satin square-cut tab falling from beneath the belt of silver ribbon.

Watteau ruffles weight these tabs and other buds dot the lace flounce and finish the sleeves, while a bit of embroidery in tarnished silver on the sides of the tabs gives the finishing note to the costume.

FATE OF THE IONE TURNS OUR CONVERSATION UPON SPIRITUALISM

"Spiritism—or spiritualism—is as old as man," said Bob, who has all kinds of information at the tip of his tongue. "Why, eighteen hundred years ago, the ancient Egyptian described a séance of that time. It was held in a dimly lighted chamber, and the crowd got all worked up and flustered! But spiritualism was invented long before his day—long before men wrote books. It belongs to a dateless past and is still the belief of the primitive-minded."

I looked quickly at Chrys and hoped that her feelings had not been hurt by Bob's speech. Chrys has believed for years in things occult. Bob knew all about her fondness for her occult board and I knew that he was waiting his chance to make fun of her even at the risk of offending her. Because he is her twin, Bob often dares to joke about his sister's pet opinions.

Chrys merely smiled in her best enigmatical Mona Lisa effect and listened calmly while Bob went on.

"Of course we don't need to discuss superstition. It isn't for us to agree with dad's valet that the Ione was doomed because dad put his shoes on a shelf. But we must realize that a lot of idiotic superstitions are being passed on to the young, as one result of the revival of spiritualism."

"And it's a pity because the belief in good luck or bad luck, and in omens and charms, has nothing whatever to do with the belief that the dead can come back and talk with the living," asserted Chrys.

"Certainly not," agreed Dr. Spence, "but it's human nature to seize on all unexplainable events and attribute them to ghosts."

"So unnecessary because there are enough kinds of fool delusions to suit all comers," remarked Jim Jr.

"There's clairvoyance and mesmerism, and trance states, and crystal gazing, to say nothing of the ways of communication like table rapping and slate writing and levitation—and—and then some."

"To say nothing of the ouija board—hey—Chrys!" remarked Bob in his teasing tone.

"Make game of it all you want to, boys, but you've got to admit that the belief is running across the country as fast as ever the flu did. It's the popular intellectual diversion of the decade. It has invaded the universities and set some of the best psychologists of the country to fighting the scientists."

"All types of minds are interested, I grant you," said Bob. "The original American version of spiritualism affected only the credulous. It was begun by Fox sisters about 1848. They lived on a farm in New York. They claimed to get messages from the dead, but later in life confessed that they were playing a prank! Chances, however, what they started swept over the country as 'spiritualism' and was taken up by educated people."

"The present revival is obviously due to the war," put in Spence. "I heard a hundred mysterious and unexplainable incidents over there. Friends of soldiers who perished demand comfort—and everybody craves mental excitement, and certainly nothing can be more comforting nor more exciting than so-called 'proofs' that the dead can communicate with the living."

"All opponents claim that the mediums use simple conjurer's tricks which any detective ought to catch on to and reveal," said Jim.

"What about my vision of two figures on a beach at midnight? Explain that if you can." I put the case to anybody in the company who cared to answer.

"A hallucination, Mrs. Lorimer—and a coincidence, I say, even the I was benefited by your hallucination," said Spence.

"Merely a remarkable coincidence?" I asked.

Spence nodded and went on: "Don't you recall what Bacon said about dreams? Men make what they hit, but never make what they miss!"

"In other words, Jane made up her pictures and then believed in them! And it was just a chance they—she and Travers—picked up you two strays," Bob explained.

"The capacity of the human mind for being fooled is only equalled by its ability to fool itself," said Jim.

"Old Balaam tells how he fooled himself. He poisoned one of the characters in a book, then threw down his pen and went to dinner. The taste of arsenic was so strong in his mouth that it made him awfully sick—actually sick!"

Soldier's Wife Wins Praise of Veterans

For her many unselfish and gratuitous acts of kindness to service men during and after the war, Mrs. Othilia G. C. Beale, former justice of the peace, and wife of Lieut. Col. Walter B. Beale, received Wednesday the heartfelt thanks of Col. Theodore Roosevelt post, No. 24, Veterans of Foreign Wars.

In resolutions forwarded to her expressing the heartfelt thanks of members of the post, it is set forth that Justice Beale gave much of her energy to assisting the Red Cross, the Liberty Loans and to aiding individual soldiers in many ways, such as officiating at their marriages without charge.

On the return of her husband, it is pointed out, she resigned her official position, insisting that her successor be an ex-service man, with the result that J. William Hoar, an overseas veteran, was elected.

"The post takes great pleasure in commending that spirit as being worthy of the wife of a soldier, the sister of soldiers and the daughter of a veteran of the civil war," say the resolutions.

Resolutions were also passed and forwarded to David J. Williams, collector of internal revenue, thanking him for appointing ex-service men to positions created under the national prohibition law.

The post endorsed proposals to erect a monument to civil war veterans in the old Yeaser triangle at Third ave. and Yeaser way.

UNHAPPILY WED TO COLLEGE GIRL; HAPPINESS WITH ACTRESS

Dear Miss Grey: Allow me to write a few lines in response to the "College Girl vs. Chorus Girl" discussion. I kept company with a college girl for four years. She was very good company, but I knew my salary wouldn't give her the home and clothes she had been used to. However, I put the question to her, and she was willing to give up some of the luxuries in order to be with me.

We were married and things went along very nicely for a year, then I could see she was dissatisfied. She then got money from home to buy dresses and jewelry in order to go to dances and afternoon teas, etc. I would come home from the office to a cold dinner, sometimes have to eat alone. We were finally divorced.

For two years I was utterly disgusted with ALL women. One day I met an old friend, and was asked to attend a "wild" party that was to take place that night. I went.

The party consisted of mostly college boys and chorus girls. I was infatuated with one of the girls, and it later developed into a love affair. In four months we were married.

We got along very well for six months, when I took sick and was laid up for eight months. She went back to the chorus and between shows would crochet and knit to get extra money to keep the house going.

That was six years ago. We now own a nice little home and never once have I come home to a cold dinner. She was a chorus girl and with a "past." But she is true blue.

A HAPPY MAN.

WHAT do YOU think? Write Cynthia Grey, care of The Seattle Star.

Dear Miss Grey: In connection with the discussion in your column regarding the advisability of marrying for love or money, I agree that the person who chooses the former is on the right track—absolutely—and I do not believe anyone who knows the real thing will say any

The loyal love of a good woman is something for which no price is too great. I know, for I have the good fortune to know one such woman. A woman who has risked everything, even her good name, to try to make a man of me. I believe she has in a measure succeeded. At least she has given me the desire to be one. But I sincerely advise any girl to make a man prove that he is in deadly earnest before she risks more than she can afford to lose. No real man will try to hold a girl thru pity. I've put in long months of agony and loneliness for her when I might have claimed her for my own, because I wanted to make good and prove to the world that I had.

I have heard the question asked to what is the best course in winning a woman's love. I think the answer can be found in the admonition, "As ye sow, so shall ye reap." A true, loyal soul calls for another of the same kind. Being has given woman intuition as her protection. The better a woman is, the greater this power is in her. Every time another thinks of her the thought, consciously or unconsciously, registers in her mind. So it follows, that to truly win a woman you must love her with all your heart.

To anyone who realizes that it is easier to profit by the mistakes of others than to make them himself, and especially young, unmarried men, I have this to say: Think clean; live clean; be a man. Cultivate love in the heart of a good girl and after you have won it, dedicate your very life to seeing that it is not abused.

BOB.

Dear Cynthia Grey: I would like to say a few words to "Still Interested." She must be a man or she would not try to down her sex the way she does.

Now, why should the women discard all their finery for plain clothes when the men continue to wear pinch-back suits, jazz hair cuts, English shoes, powder their faces (which I have known many to do) and smoke cigarette? Now, how

I am employed in an office where there are all classes of men, and I can surely see that they are all the same, that is, interested only in themselves and always har-har-ing around at some joke or jest. If only a few more girls would let some of these conceited men know that they aren't forever on their knees begging for their attentions, perhaps some of said men might be more decent—and I mean honest-to-goodness-decent.

I suggest that we make "Still Interested" our president. Come on, let's go!

A STENOGR.

Dear Miss Grey: After reading the statements of several of our readers regarding the views of "A Bachelor Girl," and noticing that they all think she is incorrect, I wish to say that I for one agree with her. If only a few more girls would let some of these conceited men know that they aren't forever on their knees begging for their attentions, perhaps some of said men might be more decent—and I mean honest-to-goodness-decent.

I am not a homey old maid by any means, so don't write this as a last despairing hope that I may reform some man yet, as I don't ever intend to reform a man—it is impossible.

I hope, Miss Grey, that you will give this a little space in your column in support of "A Bachelor Girl." Eighteen and a confirmed mad hatter.

A VOTE

For Woodlawn Is a Vote for Service

Yesterday the voters of Seattle cast ballots for their favorite candidates. Each voter chose the candidate he thought would render the best public service. This happens once a year.

But every business day in the year people must decide upon their favorite florist. The fact that so many thousands of people have chosen Woodlawn is because they have decided that Woodlawn service is always satisfactory.

You, too, will reach that conclusion if you entrust your next floral commitment to our care.
