At the commencement of the Wilson administration some Republican papers intimated that the success of the Democratic party in 1916 depended upon the race between Hard Times and Prosperity. As we enter into the last lap, Prosperity has a decided lead, and judging from the fatigued appearance of Hard Times, will be an easy winner.

Publicity is the best way to fight the mail order house, Mr. Merchant. Make inducements for people to trade with you, and they will quickly take advantage. The mail order house uses that system with expensive catalogs, etc.; local merchants have at their command a much less expensive system—the newspapers. Merchants that advertise judiciously and systematically find that it pays large returns.

as at the thrifty home the store news is always looked forward to with interest.

Bryan's Willful Corpse

"The late Mr. Bryan," says an eastern newspaper in a headline, assuming that the late Mr. Bryan is politically dead. Well, maybe so. He has made his mistakes and has in fact gone to the boneyard. But we can't help remembering at least six separate occasions during the past twenty years when Bryan "killed himself politically." And since he was first killed politically in 1896, he has headed the party ticket for president twice and dictated the nominee. We never heard of such an ornery corpse as Bill's corpse. It refuses to stay dead.

Hogs Dying From Cholera Should Be Burned

"Some complaints have reached this office stating that hog cholera was being spread from one farm to another by buzzards," said C. L. McArthur assistant professor of veterinary science in the College of Agriculture, Fayetteville. These large birds can carry hog cholera upon their feet very easily. When dead hogs are not disposed of at once they soon attract buzzards and in devouring the dead animal, the feet of the birds become covered with cholera infection. From this spot the buzzards fly to other hog pens in the neighborhood, sometimes as much as 10 or 15 miles away. Wherever the birds alight, the germs of cholera are left, and in this way cholera often starts in a neighborhood where hitherto it has been unknown. All of this, however, does not mean that the buzzard should be killed, as this bird is both useful and necessary. What it does mean, however, is this—that farmers, losing animals from hog cholera or other infectious disease, should dispose of these animals by burning promptly. Burying will do if it is not possible to burn them, but burning is the much better plan. By saturating the body with coal oil and starting a fire directly under it, a body can be burned with much less trouble than it can be buried.

TEN-DOLLAR BUGS

Election Law Muddle

The election law passed by the last legislature, consolidating state and federal elections, makes it necessary for circuit court judges, chancellors, and members of the Arkansas supreme court, whose terms expire previous to November, 1918, and who are candidates for reelection, to be candidates at the next judicial elections, according to an opinion handed down by W. L. Moose, attorney general. In other words it will be necessary for candidates to be nominated nearly three years before they can take office. In addition, the change in time of holding the election from September to November will create a vacancy, at least in the circuit judgeship during this period of two months. This vacancy, however, can be filled by appointment by the governor, it is understood. The attorney general's construction affects Circuit Judge James Cochran and Chancellor W. A. Falconer of this city.

"On the next Tuesday after the first Monday, November, 1916, and every two years thereafter, there shall be held an election in each precinct and ward of this state for the election of all elective state, county, and township officers whose terms of office are fixed by the constitution at two years," the law says, "and state senators in their respective districts when the terms for which senators shall have been elected shall expire before the next general election; and for judges of the supreme and the circuit courts when the term of office of any judge shall expire before the next general election; and for United States senators and representatives in congress of the United States for each congressional district; and for prosecuting attorney."

Chancellors are elected for six years and circuit court judges for four years. The greater number of circuit judges were qualified in 1914, and most of the chancellors in 1916. On these officials will fall the burden of again being candidates in the next primary and next election, if they wish to retain their offices.

The new law will not materially affect officers whose terms are fixed by the constitution at two years, since it is provided that they shall hold office until their successors are elected and qualified; the principle effect upon them will be that these now serving will have from one to two months longer term than that for which they were elected.

Heretofore all have been elected in September and qualified Oct. 31. Hereafter they will be elected in November, and it will be 30 days before all returns can be canvassed and the successful candidates certified. In this particular, the law is defective in that it makes no specific time for newly elected officers to qualify.

The new law provides that if "the terms of office of any judge shall expire before the next general election," he shall run in the preceding election, which in this instance will be in 1916. Thus a judge or chancellor nominated next spring and elected next November, will take his office about Jan. 1, 1919, three years after he has made his race.

In all probability the law will get before the supreme court for interpretation before the next legislature meets. It could be attacked if some officials refuse to put the offices in question on the ballots, or if a new judge is elected and the judge now in office refuses to surrender his office.

When the next legislature meets it no doubt will be presented with a measure seeking to remedy the present statute. The law also will be attacked by a repeal measure drawn by members of the legislature from the counties having large negro votes.

Wants Damages.

E. Butts, by his attorneys, Benson, Partain, and J. H. Evans, has filed suit in the Ozark division of the Franklin county circuit court, against E. E. Newman, and the Arkansas Traffic Bureau, a partnership composed of R. M. Bronson and W. H. Dunblazier.

The plaintiff, in the name of the Altus Lumber Co., gave the Arkansas Traffic Bureau claims for adjustment against the St. Louis Iron Mountain and Southern Railway Co. When the case was called in court at Little Rock, judgment was rendered against the railway company for $189.34, which sum was paid into court.

Plaintiff claims that on the 6th day of September, 1913, the defendant, E. E. Newman, unlawfully made and signed a written instrument, purporting to be the power of attorney of the Altus Lumber Co., appointing the Arkansas Traffic Bureau attorney for the lumber company and giving the Bureau the right to collect the said freight claim of the lumber company; also giving the defendant Bureau the authority to adjust claims which were filed and allowed under the name of the Altus Lumber Co. which were the sole property of E. E. Butts.

The plaintiff claim that the defendants here deprived him of the sum of $189.34 for which amount he seeks judgment, as well as $50 damages and other relief.
