It is generally supposed that the first use of armor for battleships was of fact, the Dutch claim to have been the pioneers of ironclad building more than 300 years ago. During the famous siege of Antwerp by the Spaniards in 1585, says J. R. Hale in mous Sea Fights," the people of the city built a huge flat bottomed warship, armed with heavy iron plates, which they named the Finis Belli, a boastful expression of the hope that she would end the war. An old print of the Finis Belli shows a four masted sel steered badly and eventually ran aground under the Spanish batteries and fell into the hands of their com mander, the Duke of Parma. He kept the Finis Belli as a curiosity till the end of the siege.

HIS MANLY BEAUTY

By WALTER EMMONS BROOKS Copyright by American Press Asso-clation, 1911.

At twenty-two I lived in a city and in a rear room. Back of the house were yards just deep enough for clothesiines and then the rears of

One day while looking out of my window I saw a girl sitting pensively at a window of a house across the yards. She was doing something with ting, though it was done beneath the sill, so that I could not be sure. She was looking down pensively, but whether her eyes were bent on her work I could not tell. I was struck with her regular features and, above with an expression of sadness that seemed inappropriate to a young

It doesn't require much to set a young man's fancy flying, though by this I do not mean to belittle the picture to which I have referred. I saw her about the same time every day and fell to dreaming about her. The fuel of love is imagination. A youngster is attracted to a girl not for what she is, but for what his fancy paints her. And girls are still more apt to endow a man with noble qualities and love him for them.

It was in the summer time, and when I came home from business every day at 6 it was still very light, and every day at that hour I saw the girl opposite sitting in the same position Since I stood right up before my own window it was impossible that she should not have been aware of my presence there. Occasionally she would turn her face outward, but I could not see that her eyes ever rested upon me. But I remembered that a pure girl would not gaze upon a stranger-certainly not when he was look ing at her. Every day on entering my room after my return from business I dressed for the evening, making myself appear as attractive as possible, then threw open the shutters with as much clatter as possible that I might attract the at tention of the girl opposite. Hearing the sound, she would turn her face in my direction, but only momentarily and without any look of recognition This I put down to her native modesty and purity. But I remembered that there was a young man opposite, and it occurred to me that if she con sidered that young man especially good looking she might fall in love with him, for this was not only my theoretical basis of love at that time, but I saw no other way of attracting her. I spent some time discovering the young lady's name, then wrote her a note couched in as manly and respectful terms as I knew how. I had no thought of making headway by what wrote, but I must open communication, and in doing so I wished to give the girl an opinion of me commensurate with the admiration, if any, that she had for my personal appear ance.

To make a long story short, I received a courteous reply to my note, the young lady stating that, though she could not consent to a correspondence with a stranger, in case I could find means of making myself known to her through a mutual friend or other wise, should my position and character prove satisfactory, she would be happy to have me call upon her

The day I received this note I spent some time before my mirror wondering that the girl should have found such attractiveness in it as to call forth so favorable a reply. I set my wits to work to discover some mutual friend to introduce me; but, having recently come to the city a stranger knew very few people. Finally I wrote another note to the girl I adpermission to furnish references.

To this I received a reply that she would not receive calls for a few weeks, but if after the expiration of that time I was of the same mind she would be happy to receive me.

Those weeks were the longest of my life. From Sunday to Sunday seems like from month to month. After three Sundays had passed I dispatch ed a note asking if I might be per mitted to call. I received a reply giving the desired permission that day

When after the sending up of my card Miss Markley came into the room where I awaited her what I especially noticed was that she looked at me as though she had never seen me before and was curious to know what sort of a looking fellow I was. Having received me with a fair amount of cordiality, we seated ourselves, and she said:

"I will explain why I put you off so long. It was necessary. I had learned who you are, and the delay was not because the report I had of you, for it was very flattering. The truth is that I was born blind. Until a couple of weeks ago I had never seen any object. It was recentdecided by several oculists in counsel that an operation should be performed on my eyes with a view to opening up a world to me. That operation has been eminently successful. You have mentioned in your notes having seen me at my window. I have never seen you till this moment.'

That was the last of reliance upon my manly beauty to win a sweetheart. I married Miss Markley, but I won her not by my good looks, for she says that I am rather homely than hand-
