It is somewhat astonishing to the people of the West, that all, or nearly all the Congressmen they elect are won over in some manner to support appropriations for im-proving eastern and northern harborf, riv-ers and railroads, but they can never win the eastern men to support any appropria-tions of any respectable amount, for the improvement of western rivers, although it is well known that the commerce of the great vallies of the Ohio, Cumberland and Mississippi far exceeds that of all Eastern harbors rivers and railroads combined, if we except the one harbor of New York. Instead of inproving western rivers our own Congressmen vote large rivers our own Congressmen vote large subsidies to railroads which build bridges so as to impede navigation. This seems to be done with a purpose, as it is well known that bridges can be built that would not offer the slightest ebstacle in navigation.
