A Scheme That Failed

Illustrating a Feminine Trait
Not to Be Ignored
By F. A. MITCHEL

Phoebe and I having become engaged, I considered it the proper thing for us to call on my aunt to receive her congratulations. My aunt never made calls herself and was double the age of either of us. Besides, it was understood that I was down in her will for the principal part of her fortune.
Phoebe said that she would rather take a whipping than go to be inspected, but there was no way out of it, and she consented.

"YOU FORGET THAT WE ARE JUST EN-GAGED."

to bring the affair to a crisis as soon as possible, for spring is not far off.
When the season closes I go for my annual trip southward and must send Mabel home.
"Now, I wish you two to help me in a little scheme I have in my mind to bring Tom and Mabel together. It is for me to get the four of you here, and you, John, I wish to be attentive to Mabel, while you, Miss — (I mean Phoebe), devote yourself to Tom. Each of the two incipient lovers will be frightened for fear of the loss of the other, and the match will be assured.
Of course they are not to know that you two are engaged." Both Phoebe and I received this proposition with a frown.
"But, Mrs. Perkins," Phoebe began, "you forget that we are just engaged, and—"
"Good gracious, Aunt Caroline, do you suppose you can make a dummy lover out of a man who has recently become a real one?"
"Now, don't be silly," resumed my aunt. "It is because you are engaged that I have selected you for my purpose. You both know that what attention you give elsewhere is simply to please me. You understand that the whole affair, so far as you are concerned, is the same as personating a character on the stage. The consequence is that there will be no jealousy on your part; you are simply to excite it in the others."
"Certainly not!" said Phoebe. "What I was going to say was that, just having become engaged, why—" Seeing that it was necessary for me to help Phoebe out, I broke in.
"Phoebe means, Aunt Caroline, that, having just become engaged, we might forget our parts and mix the thing all up." Phoebe said nothing more. My aunt looked annoyed. I must keep the peace.
"Oh, we'll do what we can in the premises, aunt," I said. "Won't we, Phoebe?" I gave Phoebe a look as much as to say, "Leave it to me." So she said of course anything that my aunt wished would be cheerfully acceeded to by her.
Everybody being satisfied, my aunt told us that she would expect us to dinner on the following Wednesday, when we would meet Miss Maryweather and Mr. Singleton, and the curtain was to rise on the play.
On that first meeting my aunt assigned me to take Miss Maryweather in to dinner, and Singleton was chosen to escort Phoebe.
I was between two fires. If I did not appear to be attracted by Miss Maryweather I would displease my aunt. If I did I would displease Phoebe. On one of these women hung a fortune which I had been brought up to consider my own in time. On the other hung my life's happiness. I concluded to please my

TO HOLD CONFERENCE IN PARIS

England, America, Austria, Germany and Belgium to Send Delegates to France Next July—Competition in Countries Close Is Desired.
Even before the result of the matches for the Davis cup, held at Christchurch, New Zealand, was known steps to institute an entirely new competition for the lawn tennis championship of the world had been taken. A formal invitation has been sent to the various lawn tennis governing bodies by the president of the French society, which rules lawn tennis, asking them to send representatives to a conference which is to be held in Paris in July.
The purpose of this conference is to decide whether it is desirable to institute a lawn tennis championship of the world, and, if the answer is in the affirmative, to formulate rules to govern the competition and to select a time and place for holding the first meeting. It is almost a certainty that Great Britain, Germany, Austria and Belgium will send delegates to the conference, while France will, of course, have its representatives there.
For a number of years there has been talk of a world's championship lawn tennis meeting. It is felt that the Davis cup competition, while in a measure serving the purpose, has never done so fully owing to its being a contest between nations instead of one between individuals. This feeling has gained in strength with each year the Davis cup has been held in Australia. It is pointed out that since 1907 there has been no real competition among the "champion nations," to employ the phraseology of the Davis cup regulations, inasmuch as America is the only country that has sent a team to the antipodes, owing to the great distance and the amount of time required to make the trip. It is recalled that so long as the cup was held in England all the other nations sent teams to battle for it.
The same condition of affairs would prevail if America were the holding country. It is said that the European nations were only waiting for the cup to be brought back to America to challenge for it almost in a body. Had the New Zealand contest resulted differ-ently the greatest lawn tennis competition in the world's history would have been held here this year. Great Britain, France and Germany were ready to send teams, and Australia would almost certainly have challenged, with Brookes to captain her team, in the endeavor to regain what she has come to look upon as her own.
There never has been a world's lawn tennis championship instituted, and many people are disposed to conclude that it is not feasible to hold one. The principal tennis playing nations are located so near each other, with the exception of Australia, that no insuperable difficulties exist, however. If European players were ready to cross the ocean in pursuit of the Davis cup they would be even more ready to do so if the prize were a real world's championship. As for American players, there are probably half a dozen who would vie with favor the plan of making a bid for titular honors. Many Americans have contested for English championship honors at Wimbledon in the past, and several of the topnotch-ers of today have been quietly turning over the project of having a try next year for the English title.
HENRY MAY NOT COMPETE.

Entering Olympic Tryouts.
Gwynne Henry, the national champion sprinter, says in a letter to the Olympic committee headquarters in New York that he will be unable to compete in the Olympic tryouts next spring. The champion is attending college in Blackwell, Okla., and will not be able to start east until June 5.
Henry is much perturbed over the outlook. He is anxious to make the trip to Stockholm and says that he is in good condition. He is confident of his ability to beat Ralph Craig, the intercollegiate champion of the University of Michigan, in both dashes.

ic games team to go to Stockholm or early in June in the east at the Harvard university stadium, Cambridge, in the west at the University of Chicago's Marshall field and on the Pacific coast in Golden Gate park, San Francisco.

Why Young Pitchers Make Mistakes.
King Cole, Cub twirler, says one mistake which most young fellows make is that they put a bushel of "stuff" on the ball when they get in a tight place.
Opposing batters naturally look for this and slug it a mile or more.
