New Hair Grown by Cuticura.

"About two years ago I was troubled with my head being scaly. Shortly after that I had an attack of typhoid fever and I was out of the hospital possibly two months when I first noticed the loss of hair, my scalp being still scaly. I started to use dandruff cures to no effect whatever. I had actually lost hope of saving any hair at all. I could brush it off my coat by the handful. I was afraid to comb it. But after using two cakes of Cuticura Soap and nearly a box of Cuticura Ointment, the change was surprising. My scalp is now clear and healthy as could be and my hair thicker than ever, whereas I had my mind made up to be bald. W. F. Steese, 5812 of paint materials. Broad St., Pittsburg, Penn., May 7 and

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 grops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one alundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

NO NEED TO TAKE CHANCES

There is a Sure Way of Knowing Good Paint Material.

There is really no need whatever for any property owner to take chances in the selection of his paint materials. It doesn't cost a cent to learn how to be on the safe side. Certainly every property owner has enough at stake to find this out.

The Man in the Overcoat

The Burglar had watched her exit from an opposite area, and on seeing her pause at the corner of the avenue for a heart-to-heart talk with the big policeman concluded the coast was clear and slipped in.

He gave himself a good half hour for operations before the maid would

Softly the front door closed, almost silently, but there must have been The shortest cut to heaven is lifting keen ears listening upstairs, for a woman's voice called down:

"Is that you, John?"

This was exasperating! The mistress of the house had been safely and distantly located in the basement only five minutes before. The Burglar began to whistle.

He was a good mimic and had not walked down-town behind her husband that morning for nothing. As the notes of "El Capitan" rose on the air he noiselessly extracted an ebony-handled umbrella from the hatstand and tried on John's overcoat, which he sorely needed. It was a perfect fit.

"I don't think you're very polke," remarked the voice upstairs. (It was a sweet voice with a suspicion of tears in it.) "Aren't you coming to apologize for all the unkind things you said this morning?"

The Burglar paused warily, considering the situation.

"There's a row on," he decided, "and guess he'll have to keep it up, poor fellow."

Still whistling unconcernedly, he seized his curiously-shaped black bag, and going into the dining room slammed the door.

"That's to put her on her ear-brow," he prophesied shrewdly if inelegantly, as he set to work on the buffet silver, aided by the electric light in the street below.

"No more good 'soft soldering' now for a good while, you bet!"

The Burglar was a married man and knew the ways of the sex.

Into the black bag, which possessed strangely elastic properties, went coffee urn, cream pitcher and sugar bowl. each article stowed away with the utmost definess and celerity. Then the Burglar cast a dubious eye on the small silver.

"Poor quality, and not much of it!" he pronounced disappointedly. "But what can you expect of the cashier of a little one-horse bank? Well, well, it can't be helped. You have to take things as you find them in this world."

It was his favorite motto, and not inappropriate under the circumstances. Burglary certainly begets philosophy. With great care and dispatch two dozen knives, forks and spoons were packed away in the depths of the black bag, a pair of repousse candlesticks followed in their wake, while the Burglar hastily concealed a motley collection of coffee spoons, sait cellars and newcomer into the ranks of modern expepper pots in the pockets of the new-up beneath the door. She had lit the hall gas.

The Burglar vaulted to the nearest window and paused for reflection.

One instant he hesitated, and the next he heard her steps at the door.

The handle was being softly turned. But even in this predicament the Burglar did not lose his nerve. Out went his lantern and down came the heavy window-curtains, while he rapidly summed up his chances.

There was just a bare possibility that he could keep up the delusion a little longer; the master of the house was about his own build, and had the same close-cropped, fair hair.

Perhaps in the dimness, with his back turned—

Quick as thought he wheeled into position just as the door swung open. There was a moment's silence.

In the stream of light that flowed from the hall the tall, broad-shouldered figure could be distinctly seen, standing motionless, with head bowed and hands clasped behind him, every fold of the well-fitting overcoat expressing meloncholy and deep contrition.

It was an effective and touching pic-

One minute passed, two, then—

(She thought she saw the broad shoulders wince.)

"Don't think it's your fault, dear old boy." Her voice was a caress. "I know how hard you work from morning till night in order to make both ends meet, and deny yourself everything for my sake. Why, you wouldn't even have that overcoat now, if I hadn't bought it for you myself on the sly out of Uncle George's check. You're the very best man in the world." (And her hand fell affectionately or his sleeve.)

This was going a little too far. With a hoarse, smothered ejaculation, the Burglar turned swiftly from strides. The black bag stood in the shadow of the portiere, but he only kicked it impatiently out of the way as he went out, leaving the mistress of the house alone.

"Jack, oh, Jack!" she cried in terror as something fell heavily in the hall outside, and running to the threshold. she gazed horror-stricken at a long, black object that lay on the floor at her feet.

The Burglar closed the front door and walked down the steps minus an overcoat, but with a stately mien that betokened conscious rectitude.

"Don't mention it," he said graciously to the master of the house, who stumbled against him on the curbing and apologized profusery.

In the glare of the electric light he looked tired and overworked. "Poor devil!" soliloquized the Burglar, compassionately (he himself hated work); "I wouldn't care to be in his shoes." And then as a cold wind from the avenue struck him, he added, rue fully:

"But Golly! I'd like to be in his overcoat!"
