

MADERO AND HIS POLITICAL FRIENDS ARE PARTED

gubernacion, and his statement that the minister knew nothing about it, puts an end to a seemingly endless discussion which has been going on in the local press. Despite the specific denials of the former minister, many local newspapers persisted in publishing articles with regard to the incident, insinuating in a more or less open manner that the minister was behind the revolutionary chiefs who drew up a threatening memorial to president de la Barra and presented it to him in Chapultepec castle on the evening after Lic. Vasquez Gomez had presented his resignation in a letter which stated that the president had ordered him to resign.

Canadio Navarro is the only one of the revolutionary chiefs originally arrested here who is still held on the charge of attempted sedition. The others have been set free.

Whether or not Francisco I. Madero is a good politician, only the election will decide. Public opinion in the capital is absolutely divided on the question and recent developments in the presidential situation have led many to believe that the merest war captain in an American city could give him lessons.

Mr. Madero has ended his somewhat lengthy discussion with the Centro Anti-Reelectionista by declaring that it might be on its way and that he was not at all concerned about the temperature at its ultimate destination. This action is quite comparable with a candidate for president in a factory district saying that he did not care for the labor vote.

Back of the turnaround for the Centro Anti-Reelectionista is an interesting political story. The revolution was originally organized by Francisco I. Madero and Lic. Emilio Vasquez Gomez, later minister of gubernacion, whose forced resignation from the cabinet caused a large group of revolutionary chiefs to talk of developments in the revolt, talk which ended in a number being arrested by secret service agents and placed in the penitentiary. As its name implies, it was the central body for all Anti-Reelectionista clubs in the republic and directed the campaign which Mr. Madero and Dr. Francisco Vasquez Gomez made against general Diaz and Ramon Corral.

Toward the close of the revolution, difficulties arose between Emilio Vasquez Gomez and Francisco I. Madero, due, as Madero charged, to certain proclamations issued by Lic. Vasquez Gomez in his name, which, as the revolutionary leader expressed it, "made me appear a fool." Dr. Vasquez Gomez also fell into the bad graces of certain of Madero's family—particularly Gustavo—and some of his closest followers worked along until the inevitable rupture came and this was precipitated by Madero's open and frank endorsement of the action of president de la Barra in separating Lic. Vasquez Gomez from his portfolio in the cabinet.

Where the Break Came. The Centro Anti-Reelectionista, strongly Vasquez Gomez in its sympathies, already had a grudge with the revolutionary leader and moreover did not like the treatment of the former minister of gubernacion. The members chose to make a point of Madero's treatment of them, however, as, when the revolutionary chief left for Tehuacan, he put all of his political powers in the hands of a committee named by himself and consisting of his closest personal friends, at the same time suggesting to this committee that as the revolution had brought about new conditions and as the Diaz government had conceded the Anti-Reelection law demanding by the old party, that it would be well to organize under a new party name. The effect of this was to reduce the Centro Anti-Reelectionista to the status of a mere political club, with no special voice in the campaign. This was had enough, but when the new committee named by Madero chose a new party name and issued a call for a convention, the evident purpose of which was to shelve Dr. Francisco Vasquez Gomez as a candidate for vice president for the Centro Anti-Reelectionista determined to make the issue at once. Madero was flatly asked if he recognized the Centro as the governing body and several other difficult questions were presented, including one which was practically a demand that Madero promise that in the event of his election, he would not put Gen. Reyes in his cabinet.

Reyes Supporters Eisted. Madero gave the committee which waited on him at Tehuacan some straight from the shoulder talk and sent them away very much disgruntled. Returning to the capital he had a number of conferences with Dr. Francisco Vasquez Gomez, members of the Centro Anti-Reelectionista and the Madero committee being present, with the result that the Centro Anti-Reelectionista has broken all alliance with Madero and has the endorsement of nearly 300 clubs in its action. The Centro Anti-Reelectionista now proposes to put a new ticket in the field and will call a convention for that purpose.

Reyes partisans are elated, feeling that the split in the Madero ranks will assure the election of their candidate. The lower classes, however, who know little about political clubs and less about quarrels among the political leaders of the country, are a unit for Madero and with every man guaranteed his right to deposit his ballot on election day, it will be very difficult to dislodge the revolutionary chief and beat him for the presidency.

Catholic Party's Activities. The Catholic party has called a convention for August 16 and has outlined a program of four days for the nomination of candidates for president and vice president. A unique feature of the convention will be that the delegates who are expected from all parts of the republic, will attend mass at the great cathedral on the opening day and the archbishop of Mexico has consented to celebrate the mass. The first two days of the convention will be taken up with the discussion of the plans adopted by the central committee and the best methods of conducting the propaganda of the party. On the third day the convention will get down to real business and in the event that it deems it wise to place candidates in the field, nominations will be in order.

If the convention opens with a mass, it will be just as unique in its closing. The final day's session will be devoted to a eulogy to a famous Catholic who has been a success in politics and the convention goes all the way to South America to pick out the man. Lic. Manuel F. de la Hoz will deliver a eulogy to president Garcia Moreno, of Ecuador. Imagine mayor Kelly, of El Paso, having time in a convention to stop and deliver a eulogy on King Brian Boru.

Early Closing Demonstrations. For some days past the clerks of the city campaign for Sunday closing and for closing the stores at 7 o'clock at night on week days. Each night after 7 o'clock the streets in the downtown district are filled with clerks who are lucky enough to have the working day close at 7. They make demonstrations in front of stores which keep open until 8 and in some instances by mere force of numbers have forced proprietors to pull down their shutters. The movement has been conducted with the greatest order until today when rowdies joined the clerks and smashed the windows of one store. Ten arrests followed. The clerks have succeeded thus far in getting a number of haberdashery stores to agree to an earlier closing.

SERENADE COSTS MEDINA $5 FINE

Listens to Unlicensed Musicians and Fines Himself For It

Mayor Juan N. Medina fined himself $5 in the Juarez police court Tuesday for listening to an unlicensed serenade given in his honor. The several musicians who gave the serenade and the policeman on the beat who neglected to arrest the men for not having a license were also fined $2 each.

Monday evening several young men applied to the police clerk for a license to play on the streets of Ciudad Juarez and the permit was refused them. They left the police station and immediately went to the home of the mayor and serenaded him. He listened to the music and when it was over asked the men if they had a permit to play publicly. They had not and so were taken to the police station.

This morning when the trial came up, all paid fines and then mayor Medina, who was judge of the police court, fined himself for being a party to the serenade.

The mayor's name was posted up publicly as having committed an offense as well as with the other people who were brought up in police court.

WILL TRY TO STOP SPREAD OF SMALLPOX

Col. Wilson Goes to Stricken Village to Combat Epidemic

Col. J. L. Wilson, of the Mexican army medical corps, has begun an investigation of the smallpox epidemic which has threatened the small towns in the vicinity of Ciudad Juarez. Col. Wilson went to San Ignacio last night with a corps of assistants and will vaccinate all of the people of the village who have been exposed to the disease, and the patients who are ill with smallpox will be isolated.

Col. Wilson will look up the conditions in San Ignacio and Guadalupe and also in all of the small villages and ranches to see to what extent the disease has spread.

It is the desire of the Ciudad Juarez officials that the disease be stamped out immediately in order that it will not spread to Ciudad Juarez and the larger towns in northern Chihuahua.

Motectuma is still under quarantine and the Mexico National passenger trains will not stop there until the quarantine is taken off.

Lopez Was in His Own Yard and Family Hears His Cries

Jose Porfilio Lopez was murdered by unknown persons at his home, on Partidillo Cavena, a mile east of Ciudad Juarez Monday night. Lopez had been shot through the right temple and received many wounds from being hit across the face with a sharp implement.

Lopez, before he was killed, had been in the rear of his home and his family, who were in the house, heard him cry for help. His assailants escaped before assistance arrived.

The police of Ciudad Juarez are working on the case, but have not arrested anyone as yet. People who were in the vicinity of the crime say that they think it was the result of a family feud.
