MARRIED LIFE THE THIRD YEAR

Warren Surfaced Injustice and Assembling With Everyone Therein.

“Helen’s White House.”

Mrs. Smith, who had just returned from a trip to New York, was sitting in her living room, looking very beatiful.

“Good evening, Helen,” said Mr. Smith.

“Good evening, dear,” replied Mrs. Smith.

Mr. Smith then proceeded to tell a story about his day.

“Today,” he said, “I went to the office and had a very busy day. I had to deal with some very difficult problems.”

Mrs. Smith listened attentively.

“After work,” continued Mr. Smith, “I went to the gym and worked out for a while. I feel much better now.”

Mrs. Smith smiled.

“Good for you,” she said. “I know you work very hard.”

Mr. Smith then turned to the window and gazed out.

“I can’t believe it’s already been three years,” he said. “It seems like just yesterday.”

Mrs. Smith nodded her head.

“I know what you mean,” she said. “Time flies when you’re having fun.”

They sat in silence for a moment, lost in their own thoughts.

Mr. Smith then stood up and walked over to the kitchen.

“Honey, I’m going to make dinner,” he said.

“Thank you, dear,” replied Mrs. Smith.

As Mr. Smith began to prepare dinner, Mrs. Smith thought about their life together.

“Three years,” she thought. “What a great three years we’ve had.”

End of story.

TRIAL ARE YOU

Mr. Newman, of New York, writes:

I have been in love with Miss Smith for many years, but she has always been too busy to notice me. What should I do?

Dear Mr. Newman,

It sounds to me as if Miss Smith has a lot of work on her hands. Perhaps you should be patient and wait for her to find some free time.

Yours sincerely,
