Aviators Find No Trace Of Missing Men Report That Lost Aviators May Have Maj. Gen. Barnett And Admiral Benson At Celebration.

After flying low over the entire Oklahoma district south of Preshitt, Texas, this morning, the four aviators who left here late yesterday to search for Lieut. H. G. Peterson and Lieut. Paul H. Davis, the two aviators, who have been lost in Mexico since Sunday reported to military headquarters here that they had found no trace of the missing fliers or their airplanes.

A message was received by Brig. Gen. James B. Erwin Thursday from Col. George T. Langhorne, commander of the 1st Bomb Division, stating a Mexican had reached the border with the report that the American aviators had been found in a mountain canyon 10 miles up the Conchos river in Mexico. Colonel Langhorne asked for aviators and the missing men.

Four planes, with pilots and observers, left before dark and flew across the border early Friday. They returned to the military headquarters at Marfa, Texas, with the report that no trace of the missing men or their airplanes had been found.

General Erwin announced Friday he had little faith in the report brought to the border yesterday by the Mexican and expressed fear that the aviators might not be found.

Mexican cavalry from Chihuahua City and Ojinaga, consisting of the desert between Ojinaga and Cuahillo Parado, Chihuahua in search of the Americans, reported that the aviators, who are believed to have followed the Conchos river, mistaking it for the Rio Grande, fell into the hands of a wandering band of Villa's men in the mountains and received little credence at military headquarters here.
