

If You Want a Good Complexion You Must Take Hot Bath Daily

By Idaho McGilgore Gibson.

Whenever anyone speaks of beauty articles, everyone immediately thinks of the complexion. A man who wanted to be clever once said to me that most of the pretty women he had met thought more about their complexions than of their immortal souls.

I agreed with him but did not tell him that a woman soon learns that the only man who takes great interest in her immortal soul is her clergyman and that most men she meets seem vitally interested in her complexion.

There is as much powder for the skin sold as salt for the palate and half as much creams and other lotions as butter.

All the people who sell complexion "dopes" have gotten rich and you can also say this for them; they have added to the sum of woman's beauty.

And yet a good complexion is an easy thing to acquire. First you must be like "the king's daughter" mentioned in holy writ, "clean without and within."

No one man or woman can have a good complexion who does not take a warm or hot bath daily.

Lillian Russell, whose complexion is the wonder of the modern age, always takes her bath very hot, and I have found that hot water agrees with me also.

One cannot give general directions for the use of baths or cosmetics. I can only tell you what agrees with me.

I never have my face massaged, but I have my head and scalp massaged once a week and all the flesh drawn up at the sides of the head. I also have a good deal of work put on my throat.

I never put powder on my face that I do not first rub it lightly with cream and wipe off with a soft cloth.

Sit down in front of your mirror and put on the cream copiously, always with an upward motion, wipe off and then put on whatever make-up suits you.

Yes, I believe in make-up, but I don't believe in following fashions in make-up. Find the one that looks well on you and then keep to it.

Later I'm going to tell you something the women of 40 cannot do when making up.

Beauties in the Movies

ELIZABETH BURBRIDGE.

Elizabeth Burbridge, appearing as the pretty sister in "Matrimony," hails from California originally, that state being her birthplace. She was born in San Diego on Dec. 8, 1894. She lived at various times in Los Angeles, Salt Lake City, Detroit and Chicago, in all of which places she went to school. Going to New York, she was engaged by the Biograph company and later entered vaudeville.

In its palmiest days had nothing on "The Submarine Pirate." This hilarious comedy is drawing capacity houses to the Apollo every day. Manager Anderson is only sorry that he did not bill the film for more than one week.

CONFESSIONS OF A WIFE

I wonder, little book, if I am doing right?

Is marriage—just the husk and the name—such a sacred thing that I should keep up the appearance of being a well beloved and loving wife? Am I putting the fact of the scandal and worry that would ensue, before the right thing to do? Dick says—"Don't give me up, Margie," but does he want me on my terms? Am I right in asking him to gain my love all over again; in asking him to court me all over again, while I am in the eyes of the world his wife? Will it be possible for him to make me forget that he killed my pride and broke my heart? Can I live in the same house with him, under these conditions and not irritate him to a point where he will not care whether I love him or not?

Eleanor Fairlow intimated in one of her letters that I had made a mistake in trying to be "All in all" to Dick. She said: "You must choose." Since she wrote that to me I have been thinking much about it, and I think that perhaps every woman unconsciously chooses. I wanted to be more than Dick's advisor more than I wanted to be his sweetheart, and I am afraid I Dick wanted of me was to be his sweetheart—to make him comfortable instead of strong.

I know, little book, that you are saying, "Margie Waverly, I am afraid that you will have to get rid of much of your egotism, if you would be a successful wife."

And yet other men have found me alluring, little book. The poor man who died to save me in the railroad wreck must have cared for me more than for other women, and, little confidant, the only confidant I have ever had in all the world, I am going to tell you this great secret. Notwithstanding Jim Edie proposed to Mollie, I believe, had I been free, it would have been me instead of her that he would have wanted to make his wife. Other men like me and have no hesitation in showing it. Would all these men be like Dick has been, had I been the wife of any of them?

Little book, I have come to the conclusion that while marriage is the bulwark of society, the absolute safety of the race, it is far from a perfect institution, as far as the individual is concerned.

I wish I could bring myself to talk to Eliene. I wish I knew if she feels that marriage is a failure. She, too, you know, has passed through the same crisis that I am now passing through, and she seems to be quite happy. "Seems"—Oh! how I hate that word, a woman must always "seem."

I believe Shakespeare had only women in mind, although the advice was given to a man when he said: "Act well your part." Oh, little book, I don't want to act, I want to be.

Just now I wish I could go away from all the people I have ever known and be for a little time not the Margie I am now, but the Margie I was before I was married—and yet you see I can't do it because some silly pride keeps me from telling the world that my marriage with Dick is not a success. Like most women and some men, I lack the courage to do the thing I ought to do because a lot of men and women that I do not know and do not want to know would roll the gossip under their tongues.

Notwithstanding Jim Edie's estimate of Eleanor Fairlow, I feel that hers is the stronger character—the greater courage.

Margie Waverly, who has times and times again said that she loves courage above everything else, is a coward and because she is a coward she will sit here and lie to the world—yes, perhaps sell herself to an unloved husband to tell the silly clamor of the people.

No! No! Little book—I will never descend to that—My love must be only paid for in kind—must suppose it is the kind of love that Eleanor Fairlow thought she was getting.—If that should be offered to me will I forget my marriage vows as Dick has done?

Oh, little book, I sometimes laugh and sometimes shudder to think that would be the case if the world should read the things which I tell you.

Would women, all women, be broad enough to acknowledge its truth—that this purely human groping to something better and something higher?

I don't know.

REMOVAL SALE OF PIANOS

STARTS 8:30 SATURDAY MORNING

We Have Taken a New Lease at 945 Broadway, Temple of Music Building. We Must Vacate Our Present Store January 31st.

143 Pianos MUST BE Sold In 10 Days

We have secured a long term lease on the finest piano store location in Tacoma—the Temple of Music Building at 945 Broadway. The building is to be entirely remodeled at a cost of $10,000. It will require a month or more to do the work. Our present lease at 915 Broadway expires at midnight, Jan. 31st. Which means that we must dispose of our entire stock of pianos, player pianos, organs, baby grands, etc., within just ten days. To put such fine instruments into storage would be hazardous, entailing great damage and loss.

Great Sacrifice of Prices

Think of it! To sell 143 pianos in ten days! We'll do it, every one will be, MUST be sold. To accomplish this we have made reductions in prices which will startle the public and create the greatest stir in piano buying circles ever known in Tacoma.

KNABE grand pianos, the finest Hallett & Davis uprights, Virtuoso player pianos, Brewster, Conway and Lexingtons, in fact every instrument on this floor has been cut from approximately one-third to one-half the regular price. ABSOLUTELY NOTHING RESERVED.

GOOD SECOND-HAND PIANOS for $67, $92 and up. STANDARD parlor organs, including such makes as Kimball, Mason & Hamlin and Packard, $15, $18 and upward.

New Lines of Pianos Have Been Contracted For

Through Pacific Coast factory representatives arrangements have been made for several new lines of pianos, announcement of which will be made a little later.

Additional cars of pianos have been ordered for the new store. Every piano now on hand will be sold at some price before Feb. 1.

Our Present Furniture and Fixtures Discarded

Everything at the new store will be new and modern, down to the slightest detail. Half a dozen roll top desks, typewriter desks, chairs, rugs, window draperies and fixtures now in use will be sold. Make us a reasonable offer.

About the Terms

To secure large payments at this sale is not so much of an object as to find homes for these 143 pianos within ten days. Bring along a few dollars. Come prepared to buy. Don't wait a moment. State your own terms. We'll probably accept them.

Notice to Cash Buyers

You will get more for your money in this sale than you have ever realized. You are able to buy for your cash practically as low as if you were in the piano business. Just figure what that means to you in savings. This is the biggest interest your money will ever draw. If you wait you will have to pay double the price.

One beautiful Mahogany Stuyvesant Piano, regular price $750, goes at

Less Than Half Price. Plays 88-Note Music.
