HEARST'S GREAT FIGHT FOR FAIR PLAY

RECOUNT OF THE VOTES IS ASSURED

Chairman of the Board of Elections Questions the Order of Judge Gaynor and Refuses to Receive the Ballot Boxes From the Police Officers—Hearst Watchers Are on Guard

NEW YORK, Nov. 9.—The police today are delivering ballot boxes to the election commissioners according to the orders given last night by the supreme court. All classes and members of all parties today demand a complete sifting of the charges of election frauds. Scores of telegrams have been received by Hearst urging him to fight the case. One from Tom Lawson tenders money and the services of his attorneys. In signing the order to the police to deliver the ballot boxes, Justice Gaynor declared that the police have no right to them in any case.

John Voorheis, president of the board of elections, claiming that in spite of the decision of the supreme court, the board is not the proper custodian of the returns, but that the police are, this morning refused to receive the returns and the ballots are kept in wagons outside the building awaiting the decision of the corporation counsel, whom Voorheis consulted at 3 o'clock this morning. Police officers, Hearst watchers, wagons and automobiles filled the streets around the office of the board. A crowd went to Voorheis' house and demanded that he open his office. He said he would not until the regular time, 9 o'clock this morning. Voorheis thinks the court order resulted from a misunderstanding.

Max Ohmsen, manager of the Hearst campaign, says that there are at least 20,000 void and protested ballots. He declares that he has every reason to believe that the court will declare Hearst elected.

Justice Dickey of the supreme court this afternoon ordered Voorheis to receive the ballots. Voorheis said he would obey, but would call upon the police to guard the boxes.

PRINCE LOUIS AT NEW YORK

His Warships Steamed Into the Harbor Today

ESCORTED BY EVANS AND BRONSON

Elaborate Program of Reception Was Carried Out Without a Hitch—Hearty Welcome.

NEW YORK, Nov. 9.—The New Yorkers were up bright and early today and many thousands of them made it convenient to congregate along the North River front, from the Battery to Forty-second street, to witness the arrival of the British cruiser squadron under the command of Prince Louis of Battenberg and the naval ceremonies connected with that event. The battleships and cruisers of the American fleet were anchored in a long line extending from the lower end of the river, off Twenty-second street to a point off 129th street. Everything was in perfect order and the metal-work as bright and shining as diligent scouring and polishing could make it. Officers and men were in their gala clothes and every ship presented a model of neatness and cleanliness.

A slight mist was still hanging over the waters of the lower bay, when the British squadron appeared, led by the flagship, the Drake. Silently the ships of war steamed through the narrows. When Governor's Island was sighted, the Drake hoisted the American flag and the first boom of the national salute of twenty-one guns, fired by the forward guns of the Drake, vibrated over the water. The last shot had scarcely been echoed from the Staten Island hills, when the saluting battery of Governor's Island fired the first shot of the national salute in answer to the salute of the visitors. The flag salute was given, as the British warships majestically steamed past Governor's Island and slowly moved up the river, crowded with many hundreds of craft of every description. The whistles and sirens of the river craft and large steamers added to the noise of the firing and all along the British ships were greeted with cheers and the waving of hats and handkerchiefs.

Once more the guns of the Drake began to speak, where the flagship approached its anchorage near the foot of Forty-second street, where the Maine, Admiral Evans' flagship, was already anchored. The admiral's salute of thirteen guns, given by the Drake was answered by a similar salute by the Maine. It was a magnificent sight, as the British cruisers steamed up the river, past the American battleships and cruisers, all gallily decorated with flags and with the rails manned to honor the guests.

After the visiting ships had reached their respective anchorages, the customary exchange of courtesies between Prince Louis of Battenberg and Admiral Evans, required by naval etiquette, took place. In the afternoon Prince Louis and many of the British officers went ashore. In the evening they will be the guests of Mayor McClellan, at an official dinner party, while the minor officers will be the guests of the American officers at various receptions, theater parties and other entertainments. A most elaborate program for the entertainment of the Prince and the British officers as well as the men of the visiting squadron has been arranged and so many dinners, receptions, parties, balls and other social functions have been arranged, that the visitors will be well nigh exhausted by the time they shall be ready to sail for Gibraltar, their next stopping place. While the officers and men of the British fleet are enjoying the hospitality of the American officers and men, the British ships will be fully provisioned for their long cruise.

A mutiny of sailors was followed by a regular battle with troops. Workmen were aided by the sailors who lost many of their number. Russia, without further disturbances will enter into a normal existence alongside the other constitutional powers of Europe."

Baron Gunzburg, president of the Jewish committee, says:

"I am receiving every hour stag-

Carrying irons and waving flags, the mob pillaged and wrecked Jews' shops, the troops and police remaining passive, except to prevent the shopkeepers from defending themselves. The Jewish casualties are placed at 70 killed and 120 wounded. The massacre was stopped by orders from St. Petersburg.
