A Blow From Barbara

With the decision of the attacks John De Haven reached a decision regarding letting Barbara know he had returned. He could not go to Mrs. Beckley Hewitt's. That was quite impossible, for he had to be in Wall Street Monday morning fit to make a fight against the unknown force attacking him.

But he could let her know. So he sent her a telegram announcing his return and saying he was engaged in business matters that would keep him in New York indefinitely. It was, in spite of his pride, an admission that he really would like to join her in the mountains, but he did not understand it as such, nor yet did she when she received it.

For Barbara had already been apprised of his return and was furious that he had not come to the camp before going back to Wall Street. She had been jealous of Wall Street for some time because she felt that he had been giving the best of himself to it. And besides Dawes had told her of such terrible things that happened there.

She recalled his telling her how men had been crazed by their losses how millionaires had became paupers how they had rushed out disheveled, hatless and coatless, beside themselves in their mental distress. And how he was down there devoting himself to business when she wanted him with her.

Anne Miller had written her early in the week and told her of the benefit Hogue had derived from his vacation. Anne did not know she was the first to inform Barbara of the party's return. Anne referred to John affectionately and guessed that "Jimmy will be running up there right soon to see you." She did not suspect there was anything between them but the deepest love and affection.

Barbara saw nothing in her husband's telegram but his expressed desire to stay where he was. The poignancy of his regret at being unable to see her, the hope that he might, soon, and the longing to be with her that the words might have conveyed, all escaped her. She believed he was remaining in New York because he wanted to stay away from her.

She did the worst thing possible. She answered his telegram with another. Clinton Dawes driving her to a little station Soturday afternoon to send it. He had returned and gone straight to her, finding, he thought, a warmer welcome than he had previously been given.

"Don't worry about me. Am all right. Camp will last three weeks longer. Will see you when I return to New York."

That was Barbara's message to her husband. She, too, had independence. Indifference was quite as possible with her as with him. She too, had pride as her message proved beyond a doubt.

Clinton Dawes did not know what she sent. He would have been overjoyed had he known, but on the way back to Mrs. Beckley Hewitt's he found her blithe and gay. He had never seen her in just that mood. He believed he had impressed her more favorably of late as they got better acquainted.

Half way back they met Bob La Farge and Dix Randall in the engineer's high powered car. La Farge and Randall turned about and drove back to the camp behind them. They had a ready explanation that they had merely driven out that far and would trail them in.

Trail them in! Clinton Dawes had heard that much of late. First he had heard it at Newport and now he had been hearing it here. Many times these two men had trailed him in from places on the road where, it seemed to him, they had conveniently met him driving with Barbara. It seemed to him that most of it was by design. He wondered what their purpose was just as they wondered about his.

However, Clinton Dawes reflected he was making progress. He found it less and less difficult to be with Barbara and availed himself of every opportunity, the espionage of the two men to the contrary notwithstanding.

He was certain that Barbara liked him. How much he did not know, did not dare to hazard a guess. They were most congeniel, he was happy to believe, and this had developed of late until they were very friendly indeed. Certain it was that she was interested in him. He saw that, had always seen it. But how deep was that interest? He did not know. He wished he might know whether it was deep enough.

Barbara, herself, while gay and lighthearted on her drive with Clinton Dawes, was angry with her husband. It had impressed her that he had flouted her. Her, a Kendall! It had not only hurt her feelings, but had wounded her pride, a sensitive thing, and now she had shown him how independent she was. Her telegram surely would let him know that beyond peradventure of a doubt. He was clever. He could see it.

"Camp will last three weeks longer. Will see you when I return to New York."

That ought to be enough to indicate to him that she was not dying by inches because he had preferred to paw over dusty stocks and bonds in that old Wall Street to spending the week-end with her. She was independent. She was a true Kendall, just as prideful and self reliant as a De Haven could be.

She did not know that she had dealt her husband, who loved her, a blow that hurt him to the depths of his soul.

Monday—No effort to reply.

RECOVERY OF ONE CENT ON COTTON MARKET

New York, Oct. 23.— There was a further recovery of approximately 1 cent a pound in the cotton market here today owing to continuing Liverpool bpying, increasing optimism with reference to prospects for a settlement of British labor troubles and covering by shorts. December contracts sold up to 21 cents, making an advance of 103 points from the previous close and of 320 points, or over $16 per bale from the low record of last Monday. That delivery closed at 20.65 with the general market closing irregular at a net advance of 40 to 70 points.

The market opened at an advance of 17 to 50 points on a continuation of the buying movement in progress at the close yesterday. There were reactions of some 20 or 30 points shortly after the opening as a result of realizing and scattered selling. Such offerings were readily absorbed, and the covering movement became excited later owing to persistency of demand from Liverpool buying for other foreign account, including Japan, and the comparatively small volume of hedge selling from the south. January advanced to 20.75 and March to 20.80; with active months generally showing net gains of 97 to 107 points. Stop orders were uncovered on a scale up and after their execution, the buying tapered off with last prices showing reactions of some 30 to 40 points under realizing. Reports that the governor of Louisiana had called for an immediate closing down of gins throughout the state came in for a good deal of comment but gave rise to conflicting views.

The cotton marked closed irregular.

NEW ORLEANS COTTON

New Orleans, Oct. 23.—The movement to stop ginning dominated trading in cotton today and caused advaces of over a cent a pound from the low levels, made around the opening. Direct rising from 19.25 to 20.35. The close was at net gains for the day of 70 to 78 points.

The opening was unsettled and for a while the tendency was to suggest under realizing from the long side. Prices were carried 11 to 25 points under the close of yesterday before mhcu of a demand appeared. At first the news that Governor Parker would issue a proclamation calling upon the ginners of Louisiana to stop ginning did not have much effect on trading but later opinion began to form that it would mean great tightness in the spot department. The announcement said Governor Parker would ask the governors of other cotton states to issue similar proclamations.

When the demand set in it swept the market clean of offerings and put prices 84 to 88 points higher than yesterday's finals. A hopeful tone in English cablegrams regarding the labor situation helped the rise to some extent. The close was firm.

Cotton market closed firm at net advances of 70 to 78 points.
