EVIDENCE OF HULL IS READ

er until 5 o'clock the next morning.
Mrs. Welborn, he continued, went at 3 o'clock in the morning to the room of Hull, the sick boarder, to give him medicine, and went there again at 5 o'clock. On the second visit she made to Hull's room Wool-man followed there. Woolman tried to make the woman return to her room, where he had spent the night, and she asked Woolman to leave the house, and then demanded of him that he leave.

She picked up a hatchet at that time and told him again to go, but did not attempt to strike him with it.
He grappled with her and wrenched the hatchet from her hands, and threw it on the bed where Hull lay.
They continued to scuffle and Mrs.
Welborn was either thrown or slipped and fell to the floor. Woolman reached down his hands to where she lay on the floor and about that time a pistol fired, and then came the second and third shots. She was shot through the left arm, through the left breast and through the breast.
She died to Hull, the sick boarder, to help her, after the first shot, but before he was able to get out of bed and to her assistance the other shots had been fired. She cried to Wool-man not to shoot her any more after the first shot. Woolman went out of the room and Hull, excited and sick, got up and went into a room and locked the door, and then Woolman came to him and said: "You knew I had to do what I did," and Hull was terrified, and answered, "Yes, I will tell it that way."

Woolman, the prosecutor said, shot himself, two glancing wounds, but neither shot was serious. Woolman was going out the door of the house when the police came, and asked one of the officers to give him his pistol that he might kill himself.

The prosecutor spoke of the evidence being that Woolman stood astride over the prostrate body of the woman and fired the shots, first one, then another, and then deliberately aiming and firing the third shot.

The Defense Outlined.

Col. Murphy, the veteran criminal lawyer who has taken part in most of the big criminal proceedings in Garland county, was in court yesterday morning, and took an active part when he outlined the defense of the case. He opened by stating that he had been warned by physicians to refrain from too much exertion and that he would ask the jurors to be indulgent with him.

He reviewed, in brief, the various phases of murder and manslaughter, and said that the idea of any malice being shown in this case will not be sustained by the witnesses for the state. "We will depend largely on the state's case for the defense in this case," said Col. Murphy.

"The killing was involuntary and the facts preclude the question of manslaughter. The only chance to convict Woolman of anything is to reach the conclusion that he was performing some unlawful act and in doing that involuntarily killed the deceased. At the time of the killing he was not acting unlawfully, but was acting within his rights."

Col. Murphy urged the jury to remember that Woolman was being tried for this killing and not for his former immoral acts with the woman. That had nothing to do with the case, except in so far as it might shed light on the case.

"She was a nymphomaniac," said Col. Murphy. "She suffered from a sexual passion. She wanted Wool-man with her frequently. He told her of the nights that he could not be with her, of the nights he must be with his daughter, and of the nights he must be at lodge. She got to calling him up by telephone, and annoying him. She kept everlastingly calling him to come to her. She went to his home and told his daughter of her love for him and spoke of marrying him, but she was not at liberty to marry because of having no divorce from her husband."

"She would go after him and fly into a passion when she did not get him. She quarreled with him all the time, but he never quarreled with her. He realized that something was "wrong with her and he would not quarrel back. She would quarrel with him about his daughter, and say, 'Oh, it is that dear little daughter of yours, is it?' She would later cry and and be sorry for her acts and would beg his forgiveness and be repentant."

"On the night of the tragedy she called him early, and then called him again after he had gone home from the lodge. Another man had been with her from 7:30 o'clock until after 10 o'clock. We do not know who that man was. After he went she phoned Woolman. He had an excuse to offer, and she said she would come after him and get him. He went to her house. She was at the door when he got there, and told him she had just started after him. She began quarreling with him, and for a long time she quarreled and later they all went to the room and went to bed."

"At 3 o'clock that morning she got up and went to Hull's room and gave him his medicine. At 5 o'clock she went in and gave him more medicine. The state contends that Wool-man followed her in Hull's room and that Mrs. Welborn then demanded that he leave the house."

Woolman's Testimony.

Col. Murphy at this point of the presentation of the defense gave something of what Woolman would testify in the case. According to the evidence that Woolman would give, he did not know when Mrs. Welborn got up to give Hull the medicine at 3 o'clock. He awakened about 4 or 5 o'clock and she was yet asleep.
Woolman got up quietly so that he might get out before other boarders were aroused and know he had slept there, and so neighbors would not know he was leaving in the morning.
He intended to dress and slip out.
He had so far carried out this program that he was all dressed and had thrown his overcoat over his arm when she awoke.

"What are you going to do?" Col.
Murphy said the woman asked, as she awoke from her sleep and saw Woolman dressed. He explained that he was going to go home, and wanted to get out of the house before the boarders knew he had slept there and so the neighbors would not see him. "She demanded," continued Col. Murphy, "that Woolman stay and have breakfast with her." Woolman insisted he better go, and she took a pistol from under her pillow, where she kept it all the time and told Woolman that if he attempted to leave the house it would be the last time he ever tried to leave it.

"Woolman took back water," said Col. Murphy, "and said that he would stay. Before this time he had frequently given Hull medicine. He had helped Hull about his doctor, and had befriended him. Woolman knew that it was about time to give Hull the medicine and thought that if he could go in there and give it that he could get out of the house from Hull's room. Woolman saw the pistol was gone and was afraid to try to go out of the house through the front, for fear she would shoot him, so he went to the rear and intended coming around through Hull's room and getting out. He put the overcoat on his arm and started out, and at the door listened. She was in her room, and he went in Hull's room, and she followed him in there."

"You are going, are you?" she asked Woolman.

"Yes, I think it is best," he answered.

"You go back," she ordered. "You want to go home to that dear little daughter of yours."

Col. Murphy said that here she drew back the hatchet she held in her hands and said:

"If you don't go back to my room I will kill you."

Woolman then put his overcoat on the chair and took hold of her. He took the hatchet from her and threw it on the bed, just as Hull said it was thrown. She came out with a pistol and he struggled for that, and the pistol went off, probably three times or probably more.

"He threw the hatchet away when he took it from her," said Col. Murphy, "and I ask you to reconcile that fact with this charge of murder as we proceed with this case."

"Hull says she fell and that Wool-man straddled her body and fired two shots and then fired another one.
Woolman has no recollection of this.
He has no recollection of taking the pistol from her. He was very nervous and in bad health. He could not carry on a connected conversation for some time, and friends with whom he talked noticed this. Physicians who knew him well will testify to this condition."

"The state contends that two of the bullets passed through the body of the woman. I have tried to get some information as to where those two bullets went. Nobody seemed to know. They did not make any in-dentation or leave any sign of having gone on the carpet of the room. If they were fired as Hull says, and went through the body, and she was on the floor, where did the bullets go?"

"Ben Woolman was not normal when that occurred. That set him
